Hickman Must Face Trial for Druggist's Murder

"FOX" SUGGESTS
PUBLIC BURNING
AS CRIME PENALTY

Prosecutor Keyes' Plan to Bring Youth to Trial on Other Murder Count
Comes as Surprise.

EXECUTION STAYED
AT LEAST 90 DAYS

Formal Notice of Intent
To Take Case to Highest
tencing Until Tuesday.

Los Angeles, February 11.—(AP)—William E. Hickman, facing sentence for the slaying of Marian Parker, and Welby Hunt, his 16-year-old "pal," will have to stand trial for the murder of C. Try Thoms, a druggist, District Attorney Asa Keyes announced tonight. Thoms was shot when his store was robbed, the youths have admitted, on Christmas eve, 1926.

The announcement came as a surprise. It was generally believed that the second charge against Hickman would be dropped, since a jury found him sane in the Parker murder trial. Hickman, together with Hunt, must appear before Superior Judge Hardy next Wednesday morning for trial. A short continuance is expected by the prosecution.

The youthful slayer today declared from his cell that he "felt pretty good," and that he was anxious to take the stand against his former pal, Welby Hunt.

Hickman said he realized he had no chance to escape the death penalty and that he did not want to be hanged like a common criminal, explaining: "I would rather have them burn me at the stake in a public place here, or in some other California city, than go to the gallows at San Quentin," he said.

Wins Lease on Life.
The surprising statement came a short time after a court appearance of six minutes had given Hickman assurance of at least two or three months more of life.

His attorneys, Jerome Walsh and Richard Cantillon, filed a motion for a new trial when he appeared before Judge J. J. Trabucco in superior court to be sentenced. The move was formal notice of intent to carry the case to the state supreme court in an effort to save Hickman from the gallows.

The attorneys estimated it would be 60 or 90 days at the earliest before the case could be disposed of in the supreme court. A much longer period may elapse before the case of the "Fox" is finally settled.

Judge Delays Sentence.
Upon filing of the motion for a new trial Judge Trabucco postponed pronouncement of sentence until next Tuesday.

If the motion for a new trial is overruled at Tuesday's session, Judge Trabucco will sentence Hickman, and his attorneys will then serve notice of appeal to the state supreme court. While it is optional with the Judge

Statue Model of Stephens Accepted by Governor Hardman for State At Formal Exercises at Auditorium, Following Spectacular Parade

Scenes of the spectacular parade which moved through downtown Atlanta Saturday afternoon to the city auditorium where 2,000 Georgians assembled to pay tribute to Alexander H. Stephens, vice president of the Confederacy, on the 116th anniversary of his birth. The occasion was the formal acceptance by the state of a replica of the Stephens statue in the Hall of Fame at Washington. Left to right: A company of R. O. T. C. students from Emory university; a mounted detachment from the governor's horse guard, which led the column, and one of three companies of G. M. A. cadets participating in the military spectacle.

The statue model of Alexander H. Stephens, vice president of the Confederacy, who was immortalized in the hall of fame at Washington recently, donated by Gutzon Borglum, the sculptor, was accepted for the state of Georgia Saturday afternoon by Governor L. G. Hardman at formal exercises held in the auditorium in honor of the 116th birthday anniversary of the famous Georgian. More than 2,000 Georgians attended the unveiling of the bronze life-size replica.

Under the Stars and Stripes and the Stars and Bars which decorated the stage and auditorium, the audience heard thrilling words of praise and honor attesting to the glory of Stephens, one of Georgia's greatest statesmen. Following the welcome address of Mayor L. N. Ragsdale of Atlanta and Mayor Scott Canfield of Decatur, the statue was unveiled and accepted by Governor Hardman with the words: "In behalf of the youths of Georgia, whose futures have been brightened by the principles he advocated, I accept the statue."

Judge Alex Stephens spoke a few words of appreciation of the Stephens family, and addresses were made by many citizens prominent in the public and private life of the state.

"America" by the audience, "Dixie" and "Star-Spangled Banner" by the G. M. A. band formed the musical program. Dr. Charles A. Sheldon, Jr., was at the organ.

Dr. Garnett W. Quilliam, chairman of the governor's committee, presided at the exercises.

Banners fluttering bravely in the breeze, the Alexander Stephens memorial parade moved through the downtown canyons of Atlanta Saturday afternoon with Governor L. G. Hardman and former Governors Nat E. Harris, Ike Smith and John M. Slater at the forefront.

Units marching in the parade included the Old Guard, the Governor's Horse Guard, the Emory G. M. A. March, Boy's High school, Tech High school and their bands. Mayor L. N. Ragsdale and other city officers were in one of the cars, while a group of Confederate veterans occupied another.

The line of march, along Peachtree into Forsyth, then Hunter and into Whitehall and from Five Points to the auditorium, was thick with spectators. In spite of the Saturday afternoon traffic congestion, an able force of traffic officers, under the personal direction of Chief James L. Beavers, cleared a way for the parade, and the event moved off smoothly and without interruption. Henderson Hallman, prominent Atlanta attorney, was in charge of the parade.

"Very simple, very human, without trace of anything sordid" was the private life of Alexander H. Stephens, Mr. Graham, who was Stephens' secretary while the latter served as a representative in congress following the civil war, pointed out that he was "one of the very few surviving intimate witnesses of his private life." Prominent Georgians Ask

Washington, February 11.—(AP)—A delegation of Georgia citizens, headed by Representative Brand, called at the white house today to recommend to President Coolidge the appointment of Judge Blanton Fortson to succeed Judge William J. Tilson, who was recently appointed to be a member of the United States customs court at New York.

The delegation included James B. Nevin, editor of The Atlanta Georgian; Sanders McDaniel, general counsel of the Southeastern Express company; F. C. Shackelford, an Atlanta attorney; Powder Phinizy, director of The Augusta Herald; Samuel N. Ekins, of Atlanta; Ernest Camp, editor of The Walton Tribune, and Andrew C. Erwin, secretary of the Southern Mutual Insurance company.

Confere With Sargent.
From the white house the delegation went straight to the department of justice, where they conferred for 30 minutes with Attorney General Sargent.

After the conferences with the president and the attorney general, spokesmen of the delegation returned to the white house and conferred with President Coolidge.

Trapped Miners May Still Live; Twelve Rescued

Hope Runs High Among Families Praying at the Mouth of Shaft of Hol-linger Mine.

Timmins, Ont., February 11.—(AP)—Although two score miners were still trapped in the depths of the "Great Hollinger" gold-mine tonight, the second night since fire imprisoned them, hope ran high among their praying families at the shafthead. For, during the day a dozen men were brought from the mine alive and only six were positively known to be dead.

As the rescued men were brought up and their wives and children embraced them, hope was reborn in the hearts of the relatives of the other trapped men that they too might survive. The fire started yesterday at the 550-foot level in rubbish which had been accumulating for years. Smoke and fumes drifted down the shafts as far as the 1,800-foot level and while most of the large day shift of miners succeeded in getting to the surface more than 50 were cut off from all escape.

Pittsburgh Sends Aid.
All efforts at rescue were futile until the arrival of a special train from Toronto with fire fighting equipment and oxygen respirators. A United States mine car was also on the way from Pittsburgh and was expected to arrive either tonight or in the morning.

Rescue parties wearing respirators made reconnaissance descents into the mine and came back to report that life still existed. It was found that in one place, then inaccessible to the rescuers, a group of men had broken an air line and by gathering close about it had been able to keep alive through the night and day.

All the trapped men were believed to be in total darkness since they had only eight hours of carbide in their head lamps when they went down.

Bel Brings Rescuers.
Hope of saving the imprisoned miners had almost died when one bell was heard sounded weakly at shaft No. 11.

The cage was immediately lowered and at the bottom was found George Zoloh, who had risked his life to crawl

COL. CLINT HEARN DIES AT RESIDENCE

Retired U. S. Army Officer Reached Rank of Brigadier General During World War.

Colonel Clint Hearn, retired army officer and resident of Atlanta for 18 months, died Saturday night at his home, 1192 Piedmont avenue, following an illness of several weeks. Colonel Hearn had been in failing health for 11 months, but his condition was not considered serious until a few days ago. His body will be taken to Washington, D. C., for funeral services and interment. The time will be announced later.

Colonel Hearn was born in Weston, Texas, March 29, 1860, and after completing his early education in Texas, he entered the West Point Military academy and was graduated from that institution in the class of 1880. He then attended a government artillery school for four years and later was a student at the school of submarine defense and the army war college.

He served as a second lieutenant of the 4th artillery, a second lieutenant of the 2nd artillery, a first lieu-

POLICE ON GUARD AS HEFLIN SPEAKS IN PHILADELPHIA

Philadelphia, February 11.—(AP)—United States Senator Thomas J. Hefflin, of Alabama, attacked what he termed the Catholic influence in America in an address before clansmen in the Metropolitan opera house tonight. A large cross ablaze with electric lights stood behind the speaker and another cross blazed beside him on the stage.

A sound of 14 marines and sailors from the navy yard surrounded him on the platform as a guard and more than 100 police and plainclothesmen were stationed at every entrance and in the aisles.

Senator Hefflin was widely cheered when he appeared on the stage. Hundreds of persons hearing counterfeited tickets had been turned away.

HAVANA CONGRESS TO CLOSE FEB. 20

Heads of Delegation Urged To Clear Up All Business by That Date. Study
Women's Rights.

Havana, February 11.—(AP)—The steering committee today tentatively set February 20, the closing of the sixth Pan-American congress.

Dr. Antonio Sanchez de Bustamante, president of the conference, urged the heads of all delegations, who comprised the committee to do their utmost to clear up their work by that date. Considerable work still confronts the committee on public international law since the fundamental duties and rights of nations are still under discussion.

Lengthy Report Filed.
A lengthy report on the Pacific settlement of international disputes was filed today by Dr. Ricardo Alfaro, president of the Pan-American delegation. Dr. Gustavo Guerrero, of Salvador, chairman of the law committee, said night sessions might be held if necessary to complete the deliberations by February 20.

The cause of equal rights for women advanced at the same session of the steering committee when on the motion of Dr. Bustamante, it was voted to recommend that the next plenary session empower the committee on private international law to study the problem of granting women political rights equal with men.

The agenda of the conference had contained only questions affecting rights of women and hence incorpora-

Henry Grady Site Sold for $5, VETERAN OF GRAY RELATES REAL ESTATE ROMANCE :: Later Traded for Two Ponies

How a valuable tract of downtown real estate in Atlanta, including the present site of the Henry Grady hotel, once was bought for $5 and later traded for "a pair of Indian ponies," was related here recently by Julius A. Carroll, 81-year-old Confederate veteran living in Atlanta.

Mr. Carroll, who states that he has lived in this city for 78 years, declares himself to be a nephew of General "Stonewall" Jackson and to have served the southern commander as courier during the struggle in the sixties. He was with Jackson, he said, on the night before the day when the general, reconnoitering on horseback during one of his campaigns, was shot and mortally wounded by

Saunders Says Dismissal

Plans.

Initiation of a fight in the Atlanta board of education meeting on Tuesday to retain present teachers of the East Lake grammar school, loomed Saturday, when it was learned that Councilman W. E. Saunders, of the twelfth ward, has addressed communications to the board and Willis A. Sutton, superintendent of schools, regarding an order of the administration department which was designed to dismiss the instructors at the end of the present teaching year.

Although only about half a dozen teachers are involved in the controversy, the ultimate decision of the board and the administration department regarding the precedent which would be set by dismissing the teach-

Executive Committee Passes Resolution by 33-to-32 Vote in Deciding Against Convention.

GEORGE TO MAKE DECISION MONDAY

Washington, February 11.—(AP)—Explaining that he had had no official notification, Senator George, of Georgia, declined today to comment on the action of the Georgia democratic executive committee authorizing him to select Georgia's delegation to the democratic national convention at Houston next June.

Senator George let it be known that he would not act until officially notified, probably Monday.

After one of the sharpest fights staged in recent Georgia political history, the state democratic executive committee, by a majority of only one vote, Saturday authorized United States Senator Walter F. George to name the members of the state delegation to represent this state at the national convention to be held at Houston, Texas, June 26. The delegation will vote as a unit in the convention.

The fight developed over a proposal made in a resolution submitted by Alex Chamlee, of Washington county, providing that a state convention should be held to select the delegates and to adopt rules for instructing such delegates. This resolution was offered as a substitute for a resolution offered by Chairman G. E. Maddox, of Floyd county, providing that the members of the state delegation should be named by Senator George, who was endorsed at a previous meeting of the committee as Georgia's candidate for the democratic nomination for the presidency.

Because of the closeness of the vote on the Chamlee resolution a certification of the vote was ordered and this verification showed that the vote stood 32 in favor of the Chamlee convention plan and 31 in favor of the Maddox

OTHER POLITICIANS
CALLED IN INQUIRY.

Sensational Development Follows Exciting Day in Which John D. Rockefeller Promises Inquiry.

Washington, February 11.—(United News.)—The senate Teapot Dome committee has what it considers conclusive evidence that $75,000 in bonds of the mysterious Continental Trading company deal of oil men in 1921 was used to pay off part of the deficit of the republican national committee, Chairman Gerald P. Nye, of North Dakota, announced here tonight.

Private investigators for the committee have already traced $25,000 of the bonds to the republican campaign deficit and have conclusive proof that the remaining $50,000 also went to the same source, Senator Nye asserted. They found that a $75,000 republican contribution made by Harry F. Sinclair, the oil magnate, in 1923, and described by Will H. Hays, former republican national chairman, to the Teapot Dome committee in 1924, consisted of some of the missing $3,080,000 in Liberty bonds bought by the Continental company, Nye said.

Mr. Graham, who was Stephens' secretary while the latter served as a representative in congress following the civil war, pointed out that he was "one of the very few surviving intimate witnesses of his private life." Speaking rather of the man than of the statue.

Republican Leaders Called.
Hays, John T. Adams, Hays' successor as chairman, and William Boyce Thompson, another republican organization leader during and after the election of the late President Harding, will be called to the stand to tell what they know about the matter Nye announced.

This sensational development came after an exciting hearing of the committee, in which John D. Rockefeller, Jr., the world's richest oil man, agreed to start an inquiry among his varied business corporations seeking to trace more of the missing bond profits of the Continental deal.

Rockefeller said he was sorry Robert W. Stewart, chairman of the Standard Oil of Indiana, had refused to tell all he knew about the bonds—and promised to do whatever he could do to straighten the matter out.

Basili Manly, head of the "Peoples Legislative Service" and co-chairman of the war labor board, traced the bonds according to the committee information. He reported to Senator Walsh, of Montana, committee prosecutor, the following:

Hays Received $75,000.
1—Hays received $75,000 from Harry F. Sinclair, oil multimillionaire, in the summer of 1923, soon after the Continental company distributed the $3,080,000 in Liberty bonds which had been purchased out of its profits.

2—Subsequently, Hays transferred the statesman, Mr. Graham said in part:

"Often the private lives of men acclaimed as great are not in keeping with the impressions made by the part they have played upon the stage of public life, and in this day of incoherence the sins and weaknesses of popular heroes are a favorite subject of writers. The most searching scrutiny, however, can not discover anything unworthy, anything inconsistent with true greatness, in the life of him in whose honor we are here assembled. His private life no less than his public acts conformed to the highest standards."

Desire to Be Just.

"It was very simple, very human, without trace of anything sordid. It was unselfish. Morally it can be held up as a flawless example. Scrupulous integrity, sincerity, strict adherence to truth, desire to be just—to judge without passion or prejudice and without being influenced by the passions or prejudices of the multitude—courage, tolerance, sympathy—all these were characteristics of Alexander H. Stephens."

"In him a great brain was joined to a great heart. His heart went out to all whose lot in life was hard. He was always helping people; he was especially sympathetic with the weak, and to a large number of them he furnished the money for an education. His home, Liberty Hall, true to its name, was a place to which everybody felt at liberty to come, and people were continually coming to it and making themselves at home there. He fed and lodged all sorts of people."

"He made large allowance for human weaknesses. Among his favorite quotations were those lines of Burns which begin:

"Then gently scan your brother man, Still gander sister woman."

"His sermon to him: 'He is kind to folks that nobody else is kind to.'"

"Religious in feeling, he was incapable of religious intolerance."

"Example of Courage."

"Physically weak, he gave striking demonstrations of physical courage; as when he refused a retraction demanded by an infuriated political opponent who was threatening his life and who pinned his hand to the floor with a knife, inflicting many wounds upon

Atlanta High School Cadets Are Luncheon Guests

Atlanta's high school cadets are here shown attending a free lunch given by merchants, bakers and packers of the city Saturday in Taft hall. The luncheon preceded a parade through city streets, which was climaxed by a great celebration Saturday afternoon in the city auditorium in celebration of the 116th birthday of Alexander H. Stephens. A bevy of beautiful girls from the various schools who served the lunches, are shown in the foreground.

It was a happy crowd of youngsters who Saturday were guests of local merchants, bakers, and packers, at a luncheon in Taft Hall, which preceded a parade by high school students of the city in celebration of the one hundred and sixteenth birthday of Alexander H. Stephens.

They had ample cause for happiness, with plenty of good sandwiches, hot coffee and Brandimati to drink, cake, pastries, candies, pickles, ice cream and other delicacies, served by a select band of the city's most beautiful young girls.

More than 1,500 students from Griffin High school, Boys' High school, Tech High school, Emory University High school and Georgia Military academy, were guests at the luncheon and then took part in the ceremonies in the city auditorium.

Members of the Junior League had charge of the luncheon and were assisted by girls from North Avenue Presbyterian church, Washington Seminary and Woodberry school. The kitchen force from Georgia Military academy, under the direction of Colonel J. C. Woodward, also assisted.

Among the honored guests at the luncheon were Mildred Dargan, J. president of the chamber of commerce, Mrs. Rebecca L. Felton, R. S. Barker, executive secretary of the chamber, and members of the reception committee.

Merchants, bakers, and packers of the city donated 5,000 sandwiches of barbecued meat, ham and pickles, 100 pounds of candy, 100 pounds of coffee with necessary cream and sugar, 100 pounds of pound cake, 2,000 French pastries, 2,000 servings of ice cream, 100 pounds of cheese, 15 gallons of pickles and 64 cases of Brandimati.

aid the aged Atlantian, and barked away for a song.

One of those mentioned was a lot now occupied by the Connally building at the corner of Whitehall and Alabama streets, and measuring approximately 100 by 200 feet. Mr. Carroll said his father swapped it off for "a yellow negro boy."

Other property said to have been owned at the same time by the pioneer Atlantian included a shallow lot with 1,000 feet of frontage on West Peachtree near Alexander street and containing about four acres; also every other lot between the Whitehall-Alabama street corner and Mitchell street, in addition to the Connally building site already mentioned.

Mr. Carroll declared himself to be the sole surviving member of the old forty-fourth Georgia regiment that fought in the civil war. Despite his close connection with General Jackson during that struggle, however, he has never taken a part in activities of the Confederate veterans, he said.

"The Confederacy would have won the war," the aged veteran affirmed, "if only Stonewall Jackson hadn't been killed."

TRAPPED MINERS MAY STILL LIVE

To the shaft through dense fog. He told the rescuers where six of his comrades were waiting the outcome of his attempt and all were saved.

As the rescued men were brought to the surface there were scenes of wild emotion. Wives threw their arms about the husbands who they had feared dead and small children shouted with joy. Zoloh was given a stirring reception when his comrades gave him full credit for saving all their lives.

Later five more men were brought up alive from another part of the mine.

Disaster Warning Miners.

Captain Pond resumed unconsciousness yesterday told how Ira Graham gave his life in an attempt to warn nine or ten men in another part of the mine.

At Graham's suggestion, Pond said, the two went from the fifth to the fourth level in an attempt to reach the men, but were themselves trapped by the smoke and gas. Pond succeeded in signalling a cage and was rescued, but Graham was dead when found.

STATE TO INVESTIGATE FATAL OIL BLAST.

Everett, Mass., February 11. (AP)—While a large force of workers to-night searched the tangled ruins of 10 stills at the Beacon Oil company's refining plant here for more bodies, state authorities took steps to begin a rigid investigation of the explosion and fire which wrecked a unit of the plant yesterday with heavy loss of life.

The toll of dead in the explosion and fire which destroyed a section of the company's refining plant yesterday was set definitely at 12 tonight after a checkup of employees had been completed. All bodies recovered from the ruins had been identified tonight.

Simplicity Itself

In the air-cooled motor, air is forced in by the Sirocco fan and carried in enormous volume over the tops of the cylinders—down through the vertical cooling flanges which surround each cylinder, with greater amounts allotted to points of greater heat. The whole motor is cooled by an ever-changing supply of air—once the air has passed over the cylinders it is carried away and instantly replaced by fresh air. (There is no recooling and recirculating, as in water-cooled cars.)

Water-cooled cars are forced to use radiators to bring the hot water into contact with the air so it can be cooled and used again—air-cooling means the whole motor is cooled directly by an endless supply of fresh air.

Greater Efficiency

The elimination of more than one hundred parts—parts that frequently go wrong and cause expensive delays—permits a saving in weight that is reflected in lower gasoline, oil and tire consumption. Their air-cooled motor is independent of extremes in weather conditions—you go wherever you will, all year round, with no thought of danger of freezing or overheating.

The fact that a Franklin Owner's next car is so generally another air-cooled Franklin constitutes the most impressive endorsement that can be accorded an automotive principle.

Only in a Franklin do you find so complete an assembly of the factors which make motoring a genuine pleasure. We will be pleased to arrange a thorough demonstration for you. Have one this week!

and all the employees who had been listed as missing had been accounted for.

State fire inspector Edward F. Horrigan spent the day on the scene seeking to determine the cause of the explosion, but had not completed his report tonight. In the meantime State Fire Marshal Neill announced that an inquest would be held in the state house in Boston in a few days.

That inquiry, he said, petition made by residents of East Everett for the removal of the oil company's plant would be considered.

ers, probably will have great weight in future annexations of territory, it was explained.

"When East Lake voted to come into the city, it was with the tacit understanding that the present corps of teachers would remain as instructors in the school," Mr. Saunders said.

"The school department has notified them that their services will not be required after this year because they have not had the normal training required of Atlanta school teachers."

Action Termed Arbitrary.

"This action is regarded as arbitrary in view of the fact that when the normal training system was inaugurated in Atlanta, teachers of the system were permitted to attend normal school during the summer vacation months until they qualified. The same thing was true of Kirkwood, when it was annexed. If the school department, backed by the board of education, insists on discharging the East Lake teachers without giving them the opportunity to qualify as other teachers of the system were permitted to do, it might react to prevent other municipalities in the Atlanta area voting annexation to the city and thus prevent establishment of a cosmopolitan Atlanta composed of these smaller communities."

"We do not believe that the administration department realized fully the import of the order, and shall call the matter to the attention of the board at the meeting Tuesday."

Junior School Compromise.

Prospects of a compromise to permit completion of the O'Keefe, Bass and Joe Brown Junior High schools in accordance with the original plans were brighter Saturday when it was learned that further overtures will be made before the meeting at 3 o'clock Tuesday afternoon.

The board voted seven to six at its last meeting to slash $71,000 from the O'Keefe and Bass projects in order to acquire land on which to establish new junior high schools in the fifth and eleventh wards.

Original plans for the three projects call for an outlay of about $723,000. Elimination of alternatives C and D from O'Keefe and C from Bass were voted by the board.

Will L. Hancock, chairman of the school contact committee of the board of education, announced that the bond commission will not concur in the proposed elimination of part of the school improvements as voted by the board.

men for the delegation declared that they felt assured that if a democrat could be appointed to the judgeship Judge Fortson would get the appointment. They described their visits with both the president and the attorney general as most encouraging and said each of them showed keen interest in the arguments favoring Fortson's selection.

Each member of the delegation made a short talk to the attorney general, in which he told of Judge Fortson's qualifications and left a written report of his past record with numerous endorsements. Both Senators, George and Harris, democrats of Georgia, were represented as well as opposing the appointment of Judge Fortson, and spokesmen for the delegation assured both the president and the attorney general that Fortson's nomination would be confirmed by the senate.

Sargent Holds Tongue.

Attorney General Sargent declined to comment on the visit of the Georgians, but declared that he could take their discussions under advisement. Officials of the department of justice pointed out that the attorney general's duties in appointments was only to supply the president with a written record of all applicants for the judgeship and that he himself did not make recommendations.

Air-cooling—How does it work? What are the advantages?

AIRMEN SERIES

AVIATION—with the whole world of engineering to choose from—has virtually standardized on the air-cooled motor. Backing this decision lay expert knowledge of engines and long years of experience. That the air-cooled motor was adopted is of tremendous significance to every motorist. Air-cooling was pioneered and perfected for the world—through the medium of the Franklin automobile.

Simplicity Itself

In the air-cooled motor, air is forced in by the Sirocco fan and carried in enormous volume over the tops of the cylinders—down through the vertical cooling flanges which surround each cylinder, with greater amounts allotted to points of greater heat. The whole motor is cooled by an ever-changing supply of air—once the air has passed over the cylinders it is carried away and instant-explained, that the would-be seller agreed to make a horseback trip to Louisville, then the state capital, to obtain "plot and grant papers" showing his claim upon the land. Whereupon Mr. Carroll, the story goes, donated the use of his pony for the trip and three into the bargain a bride and saddle. In due course of time, it is related, the papers were obtained. Mr. Carroll took possession of the faded 40 acres and the other party received his money in proud possession of a $5 pony.

The next chapter in the history of the property, as narrated by the surviving Mr. Carroll, came when the elder Carroll decided to dispose of it and did so at what was considered a handsome profit—once upon a time. He is said to have swapped the land for a pair of Indian ponies and a little surfer, thus realizing a neat return on the original investment.

"A thicket of black-jack bushes," is the way in which the property appeared in those days, said Mr. Carroll, who declared that many a time as a young man he had roamed the semi-wilderness and hunted upon it.

Other Large Tracts.

Not only the Peachtree property, but also large tracts of land elsewhere in what is now Atlanta's downtown business district were owned by his father at one time.

error's committee, expressed appreciation of the scholarship gift, tendered to the state without cost. The benediction was delivered by Dr. F. C. McConnell, pastor of the Druid Hills Baptist church.

Seated on the stage were ex-Governors Harris, John M. Slaton and Hoke Smith; a delegation of Confederate veterans; three darkie reapers, formerly in the employ of Alexander Stephens, together with city, county and state officials and the speakers of the day.

After the unveiling, Stephens Avary, a descendant of the Georgia statesman, placed a floral emblem at the base of the statue in behalf of the people of Georgia, while Mrs. J. A. Bessley, of Crawfordville, the home of Stephens, deposited a wreath of the Alexander Stephens chapter, U. D. C., of Crawfordville.

School Representatives Introduced.

Representatives from many schools throughout Georgia were introduced to the audience, including those from Agnes Scott, Wesleyan, Woodberry, North Avenue Presbyterian, Georgia State Teachers' college, Slater, Bessie Tift Girls' High school, Georgia Tech, Emory, G. M. A. Tech High school, Marietta and the University of Georgia.

Judges of the Fulton superior court were presented to the crowd as follows: Senior Judge John M. Humphries, Judge E. D. Thomas, Judge E. E. Foneroy, Judge Virgil B. Moore and Judge G. H. Howard, while others introduced were former Congressman W. D. Upshaw, Mrs. Joseph M. High, whose contribution erected the statue, and Brigadier General Richmond P. Davis, commandant at Fort McPherson.

The day's committee that arranged the program includes, besides Dr. Quillian, Mrs. High, Mrs. Elizabeth Venable Mason, Mrs. Charles P. Byrd and Colonel J. C. Woodward.

MRS. CHARLES P. BYRD THANKED BY QUILLIAN.

Editor Constitution: Please allow me space to express my obligation to Mrs. Charles P. Byrd for her wonderful work in making the celebration of Alexander H. Stephens' birthday on yesterday so successful.

It had been my deliberate purpose to present Mrs. Byrd to the audience at the exercises in the auditorium, and to asking me to give my personal gratitude and the appreciation of the entire committee, for it seemed that she thought of everything and without her untiring efforts we would have been helpless, but in the confusion and restlessness of the audience near the conclusion of the program I neglected to do this. This neglect, while everyone must know was unintentional, is unpardonable, and I regret it more than I can ever express in words.

I referred to the generosity of Mrs. High, and the service of Mrs. Mason as related to the unveiling of the statue in Washington, and now I wish to direct attention and express appreciation to both Colonel J. C. Woodward and Henderson Hallman for their invaluable aid in securing military units for and executing so successfully the parade on yesterday, but to Mrs. Charles P. Byrd must be given credit for having given me more valuable work than anyone else.

GARNETT W. QUILLIAN.

PAID Educational Expenses.

"It did not take me long to get here; I met him and shook his hand, looking into two of the brightest black eyes I have ever seen. After asking me a few questions, he agreed to send me to school, and I went at his expense."

All that I have since accomplished, all the honors the state of Georgia has accorded me I owe to him. He was not only a great statesman, but a great humanitarian who thought always of the welfare of others, never of himself."

During his address, Mr. Harris' voice often lowered as if he was in the grip of an emotion too great to control.

Another high light on the afternoon's program was the address of Mrs. Rebecca L. Felton, 92, of Cartersville, the first and only woman to be seated in the United States senate.

Mrs. Felton, for many years an intimate friend of the great Georgian, spoke of the esteem in which Lincoln held him prior to the war.

Tribute by Lincoln.

"Lincoln's letters to Congressman Stephens as the most powerful orator in the house of representatives," Mrs. Felton said. "The president knew and loved him, recognizing in the Georgian representative a leading statesman without fear or prejudice."

Judge Richard B. Russell, chief justice of the Georgia supreme court and chairman of the board of the University of Georgia, declared "the destiny, hope and prayers of every home in Georgia are linked with the career of Alexander H. Stephens."

Other speakers were Seaborn Wright, of the state house of representatives; State Senator John L. Kelley; William Sealey Howard, Atlanta attorney; and William H. Fleming, of Augusta, former congressman from Georgia who with Alexander Stephens in Washington.

"He sought to preserve for us the constitution of our fathers," said Attorney General Naylor in discussing Stephens' place in history. "Though opposed to secession as a matter of policy, he was a strong contender for the right of secession—the right of the states to withdraw from the union which they had delegated to the union of states."

Frail But Intellectual.

"Frail of body, but of towering intellect; of brilliant mind and of kind heart, he was perhaps our greatest Georgian. Already ensnared in the hearts of our people, we know that his stainless fame is forever secure, for an enduring marble statue in the national hall of fame, of which this model is a replica, will throughout the years commemorate Georgia's 'Great Companion.'"

In the near future the statue will be mounted in the rotunda of the state capitol near that of Senator Benjamin H. Hill. It was announced, Dr. Quillian, chairman of the gov-

GEORGE IS CHOSEN TO NAME DELEGATES

plans allowing Senator George to name the delegates. Vice President Sam A. Nunn, of Houston county, then cast the deciding vote in favor of the Maddox resolution.

Two Plans Offered.
These two plans of selecting the delegates were the only ones presented to the state committee. The fight to have Senator George name the delegates was led by Chairman Maddox, while the fight in favor of the Chamblee resolution was led by Albert Howell, member of the committee from the fifth congressional district.

Speeches in favor of the convention plan of selecting delegates were made by several members of the committee while others spoke in behalf of the Maddox plan. The fight lasted for more than two hours and came to a dramatic climax when the tie vote was broken by the vote of Vice Chairman Nunn, while several supporters of the convention plan claimed that the vote had not been accurately counted. It was contended that Vice Chairman Nunn had voted against the convention plan, and that he later voted as a member of the committee, leaving the total standing at 32 to 32 and would then cast his deciding vote against the Chamblee convention plan resolution, thus defeating that plan by a vote of 33 to 32.

All other matters before the committee were settled without controversy. The resolution of Chairman Maddox providing for the Georgia delegation to vote as a unit was passed with few dissenting votes. A resolution providing that the Georgia delegates in the electoral college be selected at the regular state convention to be held during the summer was passed unanimously.

No provision was made in the Maddox resolution for the election of a national democratic committeeman and committeewoman. Vice Chairman Nunn, in answer to a question, said it was his understanding that these offices would be filled by the delegates to be named by Senator George. The delegates to the last national convention, held at New York, elected the committeeman and committeewoman.
Mr. Howell raised the question of the absence of a "dry" clause in the Maddox resolution, stating that the committee should not adjourn without including such a clause in the resolution.

George Indorsed.
Indorsement of Senator George for the presidency, previously given by the committee, was unchanged and all the speakers declared that Senator George has the unanimous support of all the democrats in Georgia for the presidential nomination.

The Chamblee resolution, which was defeated, provided that a state convention be called to select delegates to the Houston convention; that the candidacy of Senator George be indorsed; that a chairman of the state delegation be named by such convention; that a national committeeman and national committeewoman be named in such convention; that the convention adopt suggestions for the party platform to be presented by the delegates to the Houston convention. This resolution also contained a clause providing that the method of selecting delegates to this state convention be left to the county executive committee. It also contained a clause providing that the state convention should go on record and instruct its delegates to work for the affirmative declaration in form in favor of the strict and rigid enforcement of the eighteenth amendment and to oppose all efforts toward either modification or nullification of this amendment.

The Maddox resolution authorized Senator George to name the delegates and that Senator George should be absolutely free and untrammelled in his selection of these delegates. The second Maddox resolution provided that delegates and alternates to the convention should have one-half vote each and that the delegation should vote as a unit on all questions coming before the convention.

Chairman Maddox, in presenting the resolution to permit Senator George to name the delegation, declared that he wanted to deny flatly that he was a party to any "trades" or "deals."

"Trades" Denied.
"If there have been any trades I know nothing of them," he said, "I have used and shall continue to use every effort to bring about political peace."

Immediately after Chairman Maddox had presented his resolutions Mr. Chamblee, vice chairman of the committee, introduced his resolution. He spoke at length in opposition to the proposal to let Senator George name the delegation, declaring the committee would usurp the power of the people if such a measure were adopted. "For the committee to usurp this power would be action which would break a precedent as old as the democratic party," he said. "I want to register my protest against such action, as campaign manager for Governor Hardman, who named the members of this committee. I am against the adoption of any resolution which will permit any one man to name the state delegation because it will set a precedent which is contrary to all the principles of the democratic party."

Chairman Maddox was asked if he had any assurance from Senator George that the senator wanted to name the delegation. Chairman Maddox then read a telegram from Senator George in which the senator said the responsibility of selecting a "method of naming the delegates" was the committee and that any action of the committee in this respect would be satisfactory to him.

Resolution Adopted.
In leading the fight for the adoption of the convention plan, Mr. Howell declared that Senator George's own telegram showed that he did not want the responsibility of naming the delegates. He declared that the real democratic way would be to send the matter back as close to the people as possible and said a convention plan was the nearest thing to an actual vote of the people available before the committee.

Declaring that there was a "bug under the chip," Mr. Howell said he, for one, was unwilling to take the responsibility of naming the delegates in any other way than by a state convention.

"I want to send this question back to the people," Mr. Howell said. "If I am wrong here of their rights for the first time you'll never be able to explain why."

"Dry" Clause Missing.
Mr. Howell then spoke specifically of the "dry" clause in the Chamblee resolution and said the Maddox resolution possessed no such clause. "You should not let this committee adjourn without putting in the platform an expression on the prohibition question," he said.

Others who spoke on the question were B. S. Miller, of Muscogee; Justice Newton A. Morris, Cobb; J. P. Brown, of Greene; Dr. J. E. Kidd, Baldwin, and J. B. Jackson, of Jones.

The two resolutions of Mr. Maddox which were adopted and the resolution of Mr. Chamblee, which was defeated, are as follows:

Maddox Resolution.
Resolved by the state democratic executive committee of the state of Georgia this day assembled, that the delegates and alternates to the democratic national convention to be held at Houston, Texas, beginning on June 28, 1928, be and are hereby instructed and directed to vote as a unit on all questions coming before the said convention.

Resolved further, in the event any delegate or delegates are absent when any question comes before said convention, the delegates present at the time shall have authority and they are hereby instructed and directed to cast the vote of the entire delegation.

Resolved further that the said national convention be and is hereby requested to seat all delegates and alternates named from this state, as full delegates, with one-half a vote each.

Resolved further, that two copies of this resolution be certified by the chairman and secretary of this committee; one copy thereof to be furnished to the chairman of the Georgia delegation to said convention and the other copy thereof to be furnished to and filed with the proper officers of said convention to be held in Houston, Texas, beginning on June 28, 1928, and upon being furnished with the names of such selections, the chairman and secretary of this committee be and are hereby instructed to certify the same to the national convention and the officers thereof as the delegates and alternates from this state; and

"Be it resolved, further, that it is the sense of this committee that Senator George should be absolutely free and untrammelled in the selection of such delegation, and that he should not be hampered with applications for places on said delegation or voluntary recommendations of others for such places."

Second Maddox Resolution.
Whereas, at a meeting on the twenty-first day of January last, this committee enthusiastically indorsed and presented to the democracy of the nation, the name of Honorable Walter F. George for the democratic nomination for president; and at the same time made provision that any other candidate for the nomination who desired to contest for the Georgia delegation should signify such desire on or before the sixth day of February, 1928; and

Whereas, no one qualified under such rule, thereby leaving Senator George an uncontested field; and

Whereas, by the indorsements of the delegation in congress, of this committee, the uniformly favorable expressions of the press, the enthusiastic approval of the people generally, and the failure of anyone to qualify against him, Senator George has become the unanimous choice of the democracy of this state for the democratic nomination for president of the United States; and

Whereas, the views of Senator George on the vital questions involved in the campaign for the nomination for the presidency are well known to and are approved by the vast majority of the people of Georgia; and

Whereas, it is in the interest of Senator George that a delegation should be named from this state who are thoroughly in accord with these views and who are capable of advancing the interests of Senator George in securing the nomination or the presidency.

Therefore, he it resolved, that the Honorable Walter F. George be, and is hereby authorized and empowered to select whom he desires and whom he believes will steadfastly and wholeheartedly advocate his nomination, as delegates and alternates from the state at large and the various congressional districts to represent the state of Georgia in the national convention.

Chamblee Resolution.
Whereas, the democrats of Georgia, through their state executive committee, have formally indorsed the candidacy of Honorable Walter Franklin George for the nomination of the national democratic party for president of the United States in the general elections of 1928; and

Whereas, the democratic party of Georgia, pursuant to its indorsement, is about to select its delegation to the national democratic convention to be held in Houston, Texas, June 28, 1928, for the purpose of casting the vote of Georgia in said convention for Senator George, and otherwise representing the democracy of Georgia in said convention in the formulating of a national party platform, and such other matters as may come before said convention; and

Whereas, it is evident from the popular response given to the formal suggestions of Senator George's name as a candidate for president, that his candidacy is intelligently presented to said convention he will have an excellent chance of being nominated; and

Whereas, in the selection of delegates to said national convention, it is essential that the principles of democracy for which the party has always stood shall prevail and that the people, under the doctrine of Thomas Jefferson, shall have the right of an expression of their wishes in the naming of such delegates; and

Whereas, there have been persistent rumors of an alleged trade, and whether founded in fact or fancy, such rumors have had, and are now having, a serious psychological effect, tending to cause dissension and discord within the ranks of the party in the state, which it is a necessary desire of all outstanding leaders of the party that harmony shall prevail in order to secure which it is mandatory that all evidence of a barter or picked delegation shall be avoided; and

Whereas, it has been the uniform custom of the party to insist that the selection of delegates to our national party convention in each instance be made by a convention of the delegates of the people rather than by an arbitrary ruling of a committee; and

Whereas, the democratic party is facing one of the greatest crises of its existence, in which situation it is necessary that the utmost care and regard be exercised, not only in the selection of its candidates, but in the writing of a national party platform; and

Whereas, Georgia is the Empire State of the South, and by reason of such position the councils of the party should take an outstanding part in the framing of a party platform, such part, however, essentially to be predicated upon the expression of the people through their delegates to a convention.

Now, therefore, he it resolved:

"First—That this executive committee of the democratic party of Georgia, in session duly assembled in Atlanta, this 11th day of February, 1928, does hereby call a state democratic convention to be held in the city of _____, on _____, for the purpose of _____"

"(a) Indorsing the candidacy of Honorable Walter Franklin George as standard bearer for the democratic party in the elections of 1928."

"(b) Selecting a delegation to represent Georgia at the national democratic convention at Houston, Texas, in June, 1928.

"(c) Naming a chairman of said delegation."

"(d) Nominating a national committeeman and national committeewoman for the state of Georgia during the ensuing four years."

"(e) Adopting such resolutions or suggestions for the party platform to be presented by said delegation as may be presented by said convention."

"(f) For the transaction of such other and further business as may come before said convention."

"Second—That notice of the holding of the said convention be given by the secretary of this committee to each county chairman with instructions that a meeting of the county democratic executive committee in each county be immediately held for the purpose of determining the manner of selecting delegates to represent such county at said convention, the selection of delegates in each instance to be left to the discretion of said respective executive committees, whether said delegates be selected by mass meeting, primary, by the executive committee, or by its chairman, or otherwise."

"Third—That the chairman of this committee be instructed to secure a place for the holding of said convention and that said chairman complete such other arrangements as several persons witnessed the holdup.

may be necessary for the holding of the same."

"Fourth—That said convention be held and said counties of the state be represented therein in accordance with the rules of the party and with the laws of the state."

"Fifth—That we recommend to said convention that it go on record and instruct its delegation to work for the affirmative declaration in the party platform to be adopted at Houston, favoring the strict and rigid enforcement of the eighteenth amendment and opposing all efforts directed toward either modification or nullification of said constitutional amendments."

Washington, February 11.—(AP)—Mrs. Neva Miller Moss, who claims she was once a Roman Catholic nun, was acquitted when tried in nearby Arlington, Va., today on charges of having accepted money under false pretenses in connection with a series of anti-Catholic lectures which she gave earlier in the week at Clarendon and Ballston, Va.

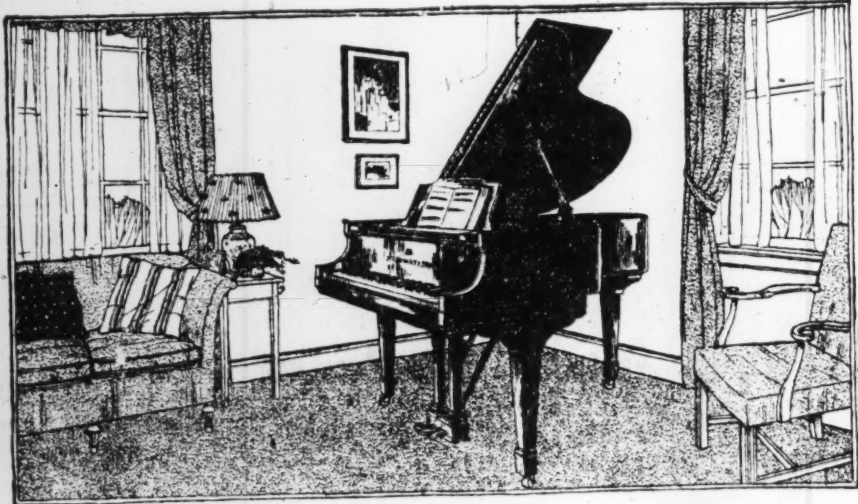

Mrs. Moss was arrested after her lecture Wednesday night on a warrant procured by a man who alleged that she never had been a nun. The court ruled that Mrs. Moss' testimony including descriptions of life in the House of Good Shepherd in Detroit outweighed evidence to the contrary.

Dr. Stewart Appoints Officers in District Oratorical Contests

Superintendents Report Interest Gaining; District Finals Set for March 30.

Officers to handle the oratorical contest in each of the 12 Georgia districts were appointed Saturday by Dr. Joseph S. Stewart, of University of Georgia, who is in charge of the Georgia contests.

This is the fifth national and third international oratorical contest on the United States constitution. In Georgia it is sponsored by The Atlanta Constitution.

In each case, the president and secretary of a school district has been named to handle the contest in his section. District finals are expected to be finished by March 30.

District Heads.

Following are the appointments of Dr. Stewart:

First district—R. M. Monte, Statesboro, president; W. B. Lovett, Savannah, secretary.

Second district—E. G. Elean, Bainbridge, president; R. E. Moseley, Tifton, secretary.

Third district—J. H. Jenkins, Vienna, president; D. H. Standard, Cordele, secretary.

Fourth district—B. F. Pickett, Newnan, president; R. B. Madore, Chipley, secretary.

Fifth district—James T. McGee, East Point, president; W. E. Dandy, University School for Boys, Atlanta, secretary.

Sixth district—R. O. Powell, McDonough, president; L. H. Battle, Zebulon, secretary.

Seventh district—D. W. Windsor, Tallapoosa, president; C. A. Keith, Marietta, secretary.

Eighth district—W. E. Monte, Washington, president; D. D. Still, Bowman, secretary.

Ninth district—W. P. Martin, Gainesville, president; W. N. Nunn, Buford, secretary.

Tenth district—C. C. Chalker, Sparta, president; Bruce McCollum, Hiram, secretary.

Eleventh district—J. P. Mott, Valdosta, president; F. E. Barron, Quitman, secretary.

Twelfth district—J. M. Goodman, Perry, president; J. F. Lambert, Fort Valley, secretary.

Write Your Officer.

Any school in these districts should write, notifying the above officers of their intention to enter the contest. The district contest must be held by March 30. This will give the winners in the respective districts nearly a month for special preparation for the state contest.

Under the ruling of the international manager, Randolph Leigh: "Any bona-fide secondary school pupil under 19 years of age on February 1, 1925, is eligible. A pupil who has been graduated from a high school and is taking post-graduate work of any kind in the same or a similar institution is not a bona-fide pupil in this use of the term, and is, therefore, ineligible, even though within the age limit. In the case of an educational institution offering collegiate as well as secondary courses, only those pupils in the grades paralleling the public high schools are eligible."

This means, therefore, not only members of the high school association, but other schools in the district that will comply with the regulations may enter the oratorical contest under the direction of the above named officers.

Superintendent E. G. Elean, Bainbridge, in the second district, writes: "I shall do all I can for the oratorical contest in the second district. A number of schools are already showing considerable interest. Bainbridge has taken first place in the contest in this district for the past two years."

Brunswick Winner.

Superintendent J. P. Monte, Valdosta, writes: "I will be glad to push the oratorical contest in this district."

Brunswick, in this district, won the state contest last year.

Superintendent W. E. Monte, of Washington, writes: "Notices have been sent out and we are going right ahead with the preliminary work for the contest. We planned to have the district oratorical contest in Athens, March 30."

Superintendent James T. McGee, East Point, writes: "The Fulton High School, Girls' High, the University School for Boys, Clarkston, Decatur, Tech High, and East Point have already notified me that they will enter the oratorical contest in the fifth district. I am expecting four or five other schools to enter for my district."

Superintendent J. M. Goodman, of Perry, writes: "I have heard from a number of schools in the twelfth district, saying that they are to enter the oratorical contest. We have not yet decided where the contest will be held. We expect several other schools to enter."

Following the district eliminations, the twelve winners will meet in the state meet. The winner of that event will go to Raleigh, N. C., to compete in the zone eliminations.

There are eight zones in the United States this year, and each of the eight zone winners will compete for the national title in Washington. Each zone winner will be given a free tour of Europe during the summer, and included in this tour is a stop at Amsterdam while the Olympic games are in progress.

POTTER TO DIRECT SPECIAL MUSICAL SERVICE AT TRINITY

Another of the fall and winter series of music services will be conducted at 7:30 o'clock tonight by the chorus choir of the Trinity Methodist church, under the direction of Dr. Ben J. Potter, organist of the church.

For many years past it has been the custom to hold musical services occasionally at the Trinity Methodist church to replace the regular Sunday evening sermon, and the programs of the church have been established on a high plane and have attained wide popularity. Dr. Potter, director, is one of the most noted choir directors and concert organists in the country.

The following program has been arranged:

Grand March from "Aida".....Verdi

HOWELLS NAMED SUIT DEFENDANTS

An order naming Clark Howell, Sr., Albert Howell and Clark Howell, Jr., owners of a majority of stock of the Constitution Publishing company, as defendants, and discharging the Citizens and Southern National bank as the defendant in the suit brought by Luke Lea and Rogers Caldwell, of Nashville, Tenn., to compel delivery to them of the controlling stock of The Constitution, was signed Saturday by Federal Judge Samuel H. Sibley, in United States district court.

Judge Sibley's order was granted on a petition presented by the bank at the instance of the Howells, asking that The Constitution's owners be made the defendant.

Under Judge Sibley's order the Citizens and Southern National bank becomes the court's custodian of the stock of the Constitution in question and also of the money presented to the bank by Lea and Caldwell for the stock. The bank was directed to hold in its possession 3,925 shares of The Constitution stock and cash amounting to $181,000, subject to further ruling of the court.

The case is transferred to the equity docket of district court under Judge Sibley's order and the Howells and Lea and Caldwell are commanded to interplead in the cause by filing their answers to the petition within 20 days from the date of the order.

M'LAREN WAS FORMER STAR ATHLETE HERE

William C. (Bull) McLaren, Jr., who Friday was appointed managing director of the Federal Reserve bank of Jacksonville, Fla., to succeed the late George R. DeSaussure, is a former well-known young Atlanta bank employee and while here was prominent in amateur athletics in the city.

He is a native of Campbell county and first became connected with the old Atlanta National bank as a runner. Later he was connected with the Atlanta Clearing House association and subsequently became one of the first employees of the Federal Reserve bank upon its establishment here.

After a brief connection with the bank he went into the service and was with the American expeditionary forces in France for several months. He returned from overseas and was selected as assistant to Mr. DeSaussure, manager of the Federal Reserve Bank of Jacksonville.

Tag Mail Orders Slump, Autoists Issued Warning

Unless there is an immediate increase in the number of mail orders received for automobile license tags for 1925 there will be a severe congestion during the last part of this month, according to a warning sent to automobile owners throughout the state Saturday by Dr. Royall J. Miller, head of this department.

"The extension of time from February 1 to March 1, within which auto tags should be purchased has caused a large decrease in sales of tags. Just before the extension was granted, the mail order division, which sells three-fourths of the Georgia tags, was mailing out from 4,000 to 6,000 tags each day. The last few days sales have dropped below 1,000 tags per day. Ten days of February age gone and only fifteen working days will be left after this week before March 1."

"Unless there is an immediate increase in orders by mail, the greatest congestion and delay in deliveries ever known will be experienced around March 1. Only 97,000 tags for 1925 have been sold up to date, leaving approximately 200,000 to be sold and delivered.

"The mail order division, in charge of Dr. Royall J. Miller, has a full corps of trained employees ready to expedite the sale and mailing of tags, but cannot fully function without a large increase in orders.

"Do not wait, but order your tag now, to avoid delay and inconvenience later. Ample provision has been made for prompt service, but each day lost now means vexatious delays later on for which the mail order division should not be censured."

PROHIBITION PRISONER DENIED HABEAS CORPUS

John B. Carter, inmate of the Atlanta federal penitentiary, was denied a writ of habeas corpus Saturday by Federal Judge Samuel H. Sibley in United States district court. In his application for the writ Carter alleged that his sentence of eight years and $8,000 fine was illegal on the ground that he was not sentenced on any particular count. He was sentenced on prohibition charges.

SECRET FLOOD PARLEY IS HELD BY COOLIDGE

Washington, February 11.—(AP)—Another white house conference on flood control about which a thick veil of secrecy prevailed was held today as the senate flood committee reached the end of three weeks of hearings and prepared to draft a measure.

President Coolidge called into conference Secretaries Hoover and Davis of the war department; Major General Edgar Jadwin, chief of the army engineers whose control program has been endorsed by the administration, and Senators Robinson, of Arkansas; Harrison, of Mississippi, and Ransdell, of Louisiana.

Aside from describing the conference as relating to flood control, none of the participants revealed the nature of discussions.

President Coolidge has met stiff opposition from the flood states to his proposal that the local communities share 20 per cent of the cost of control. Senators Robinson, Harrison and Ransdell, representing the flood-stricken states, have been among the leaders protesting against this.

Possibility that Secretary Hoover will be called before the senate committee appeared today when Senator Hawes, democrat, Missouri, asked Chairman Jones to continue hearings, because some members of the committee felt that Secretary Hoover should be asked to testify.

Senator Jones said that the hearing would not close until a decision with reference to calling Mr. Hoover was reached.

FLOODS NOT EXPECTED AGAIN IN SPRING.

Washington, February 11.—(United News)—The Mississippi river system will probably be free from calamitous floods this spring, according to Dr. Fred Frankfield, flood expert of the United States weather bureau.

Dr. Frankfield announced tonight that while the Mississippi and its tributaries will rise in the spring the floods will be minor when compared to the disastrous overflow of 1927.

Welfare Society Praises '10 Opportunities' Contest

The money raised by the Atlanta Constitution's Christmas Opportunity fund of 1926, which was administered by the Family Welfare society during 1927, was of such effectiveness as to prove a striking example of what can be accomplished with state aid to dependent mothers if handled through a case-working agency. R. A. Magill, treasurer of the welfare society, said in his report on the fund, released Saturday.

This year, 1928, two of the families which were destitute in 1926 and which were administered the money raised through The Constitution in 1927, will be self-supporting, the report said.

The money raised in 1926 amounted to $3,689. This amount was coupled with a special fund of the society, bringing the total to $5,300. From it Atlanta's ten neediest families of 1927 were aided.

Magill's Report.

Mr. Magill's report, in part, follows:

"The families selected as recipients of this fund were carefully chosen. In every instance the chosen family was without father as bread winner, and of such type as to be eligible under the average state law for a mother's pension. In each some health problem, tuberculosis in four cases, made increased relief a real factor in successful treatment of the family.

"There were 49 children whose fortunes for dependent on this Christmas Opportunity fund. 1927 was a successful year for all 49 since mothers have had the joy of caring for their own children, brothers and sisters have been happy together and the fear of poverty caused by the death of the father removed.

"Fruit children, menaced by tuberculosis, have made marked improvement. They have been properly fed, properly clothed, and have been able to accomplish their daily tasks.

Work of $5,000.

"That this was accomplished on little more than $5,000 for 60 individuals shows how much health and happiness a comparatively small amount can purchase.

"This year two of the families will be self-supporting. In one, the mother has regained her health and since her children are now old enough to make it possible, she will go to work. In another the oldest girl has finished her business course and is anxious to obtain her first employment and assume support of the family. With the supervision of the Family Welfare society continued, she will probably work out her plan successfully.

"The Family Welfare society wishes to take this opportunity to thank The Constitution for the way in which this appeal for funds is conducted, for the effort that is made to protect the privacy of these families and safeguard the children as far as possible from the harmful effects of publicity and for the time and unlimited space in the paper that go to the success of this Christmas appeal."

NOT AGAINST SMITH ON RELIGION, SAYS METHODIST BISHOP

Nashville, Tenn., February 11.—(AP) Bishop Horace M. Dubose, Methodist Episcopal church, South, author of repeated utterances against the purported candidacy of Governor Al Smith, of New York, asserted here tonight that religious tolerance had nothing to do with the way a man voted, and was necessary only in respect for constitutional provisions.

Devising in his statement to the press what he termed a "frank discussion of the subject of religious tolerance," he declared for his own party that he had no such prejudice against Governor Smith, and that his opposition was based on "wet and dry" issues alone. He is acting president of the Tennessee Anti-Saloon league.

9 KILLED IN STORM SWEEPING BRITAIN

London, February 11.—(AP)—The toll of the fierce gale which swept the British Isles last night and today and which tonight was sweeping over Denmark steadily mounted as delayed reports reached here.

The loss of nine lives was attributed directly or indirectly to the gale which often reached hurricane force. Restoration of crippled communications brought details of the havoc wrought. Three houses were blown down in Manchester and hundreds in other parts of the kingdom were damaged. The torrential rains which accompanied the storm increase the flood distress in the English valley and from Ireland came reports that the counties of Tyrone and Donegal were experiencing the worst inundations of 20 years.

A shell being rowed by the Branscoe college, Oxford, eight was upset by the wind and wrecked, the oarsmen swimming to shore.

400 FISHERMEN MAROONED ON ICE BY STORM

Leningrad, February 11.—(AP)—Fear is felt for the fate of 400 fishermen who were carried out to sea last night on an ice block which became detached from the shore 40 miles from Leningrad, during a heavy storm that swept the Finnish bay.

The storm made rescue efforts at night impossible and searching parties were able to start only this morning.

21 MORE REPORTED DEAD IN NORWAY

Oslo, February 11.—(United News.)—Twenty-one more persons were killed in storms which swept western Norway Friday night. Many houses were destroyed in avalanches which followed the storms.

An Old Recipe to Darken Hair

By JANICE RANDALL

Almost everyone knows that Sage Tea and Sulphur, properly compounded, brings back the natural color and lustre to the hair when faded, streaked or gray. Years ago the only way to get this mixture was to make it at home, which is messy and troublesome.

Nowadays we simply ask at any drug store for "Wyllie's Sage and Sulphur Compound." You will get a large bottle of this old-time recipe improved by the addition of other ingredients, for only 75 cents. Everybody uses this preparation now, because no one can possibly tell that you've darkened your hair, as it does it so naturally and evenly. You dampen a sponge or soft brush with it and draw this through your hair, taking one small strand at a time; by morning the gray hair disappears, and after another application or two, your hair becomes beautifully dark, thick and glossy and you look years younger.

PROBERS TRACE OIL FUND TO REPUBLICANS

Senators General T. Coleman DuPont, then chairman of the board of the Empire Trust company of New York, and now United States senator from Delaware, DuPont paid off with bonds the balance of two loans incurred by the national committee.

Senator DuPont has been seriously ill for several weeks at his Wilmington home, and his testimony probably will be taken privately.

Chairman Nye, of the Teapot Dome committee, said that the serial numbers of the Liberty bonds used by DuPont to pay off the debts corresponded with some of those sold in 1922 to the Continental company.

Admitted $75,000 Fund.

Hays, before the same committee in 1923, testified that Sinclair contributed $75,000 to the republican fund. It was from this fund that Manly traced the payment and checked the serial numbers to find that they corresponded.

Today's development was not unexpected, Colonel Stewart, on the stand last week, specifically denied he knew of any of the bonds being sold in the name of a local or the federal government or to any representative of a political party.

While Rockefeller was deposing Colonel Stewart's refusal to discuss disposal of the bonds today, a District of Columbia grand jury was hearing a separate request that Stewart be indicted for contempt.

In another action, Stewart's lawyers were preparing a brief supporting his attempt to free himself by habeas corpus from Senate arrest. Stewart was arrested a week ago Friday in an attempt to bring him before the senate for summary trial because of his refusal to testify.

Indictment Expected.

The grand jury is expected to return an indictment next week, United States Attorney Peyton Gordon placed the senate's citation against Stewart before the 19 men and four women of the indicting body today.

Manly disclosed to the committee that an official of the Empire Trust company, with which DuPont was connected, disclosed the Hays-DuPont-Empire transaction to him. The Empire company held a $100,000 note of the republican committee, he said.

The Continental's $2,000,000 was obtained through a 1921 contract under which it was to buy 33,000,000 barrels of oil at $1.50 from A. E. Humphreys, who had just bought the Mexico Texas field.

The hitherto unknown company was guaranteed by Colonel Stewart and Sinclair on behalf of oil purchasing companies they represented. The Continental immediately contracted to sell the oil at $1.75 to the Sinclair and Standard companies, Stewart and Sinclair signing on behalf of their companies.

Liberty Bonds Traced.

Henry Smith Osler, president of Continental, turned the $2,000,000 of former Secretary of Interior Fall, testified he received $223,000 in bonds from Sinclair for Fall in May, 1922.

Site of Lincoln's Slaying MILLIONS TO CELEBRATE BIRTHDAY TODAY Now Army Recruit Depot

Washington, February 11.—(United News.)—Spiders spin their webs in a dusty old brick building on Teas street here.

An army sergeant and some privates wait in part of the building to enroll young men for service in far-off army posts. This is the condition of the old Ford's theater in which Abraham Lincoln, whose birthday will be celebrated tomorrow by millions of reverent Americans, was assassinated in April, 1865.

To transform the ghostlike brown brick building into a shrine for the relics of the martyr president, congress now has before it two measures to rehabilitate the structure and the little house across the street in which Lincoln died.

Are Fire Traps.

The two measures, sponsored by Representative Charles H. Hickman, of Illinois, whose father was in the theater box when the fanatic actor, John Wilkes Booth, fired the shot which threw a nation into mourning, provides for a $100,000 appropriation for reconstructing the theater building and making it fireproof, and $25,000 for Hickman did not deny that he was wanted in the Tennessee city, but declared he had returned $150,000 to persons who lost money in his ventures.

He has resided at Monrovia for two years, having been engaged in a real estate business there.

OKLAHOMA WOMAN WILL AID DAUGHTER DOOMED TO DEATH

Oklahoma City, Okla., February 11.—(AP)—Dr. Frances Palmer, of Oklahoma City, said today she would go to Montreal in the interest of a fight to save from the gallows her adopted daughter, Mrs. Julia Palmer McDonald, under sentence of death for murder.

Dr. Palmer, who is the head of a local sanitarium, said she had not definitely decided upon what grounds to base her fight, but indicated she probably would raise a plea of insanity.

whether Hickman be given the death penalty or life imprisonment, depends on the opinion of members of the bar here was that the supreme penalty would be imposed.

Hickman discussed with the air of a philosopher the various means by which he might be put to death and joked about incidents in this trial.

Pictures Himself a Hero.

"It seems to be the opinion of the people of Los Angeles that I should die for killing the girl," he said.

"Then let them do it right while they are at it. Let them take me out in the public square and burn me at the stake. Sort of like a modern Joan of Arc."

Hickman was quick to deny the suggestion that he was trying to assume the role of a martyr.

"It's not that at all," he said. "The kind of death I've suggested would make the people realize just how dangerous a young criminal like me can become."

"I know I'm going to be killed for taking the life of Man. I just ask a question of how they want to do it."

Dreads Gallows March.

Hickman expressed dread at the thought of the march from the death cell up the 13 steps to the gallows at San Quentin. He said he would much prefer to be executed by lethal gas as is done under the laws of the state of Nevada.

"That would be easy," he said. "There wouldn't be any pain and it would be over in a hurry."

Hickman plans to make his own funeral oration when he reaches the thirteenth step of the gallows, he revealed tonight.

The former high school orator who will be sentenced Tuesday for the murder of Marian Parker, proposes to spend his last days writing "the greatest swan song in history," he said.

Referring to his desire to make a funeral oration Hickman said: "I'd like to make a better speech than the one Mark Antony made over Caesar's body." He noted over copies of "Macbeth" and "Julius Caesar" tonight.

JURY FREES 'DRYS' NAMED IN MURDER

Miami, Fla., February 11.—(United News.)—Three coast guardsmen, on trial for murder in connection with the slaying of E. H. Jones, a fisherman, were acquitted by a federal court jury here today.

The guardsmen, H. P. Parry, Joseph Kaskom and M. E. Lowe, were immediately returned to regular duty at the Fort Lauderdale base. The verdict was returned one hour and 40 minutes after the jury went out.

Shot During "Chase."—Jones was shot during an apparent run boat chase in Biscayne bay. He had failed to bring his fishing boat around at a command from the coast guardsmen, who then opened fire. He died in a hospital later.

Judge W. B. Shephard instructed the jury it could return a verdict convicting the defendants of manslaughter only.

GASOLINE PRICE CUT TO 18 CENTS IN JACKSONVILLE

Jacksonville, Fla., February 11.—(AP)—Led by the Standard Oil company, local retail distributors of gasoline today reduced the price of that commodity three cents per gallon from 21 cents to 18 cents.

No cause for the decrease in the price was given by local oil company officials.

PRICE ALSO REDUCED AT BIRMINGHAM

Birmingham, Ala., February 11.—(AP)—The Standard Oil, Sinclair and General oil companies here announced a three cents per gallon cut in the price of gasoline today, bringing the price down to 18 cents per gallon, including the four cents state tax.

The price slashing followed similar reductions within the last few days by the Pan-American and Woford oil companies, who also lowered prices in all sections of Alabama.

PLAN REOPENING OF METROPOLITAN

With Robert B. Wilby, one of the south's oldest theater exhibitors, as president, and Sig Samuels, for years managing director of the Criterion and Metropolitan theaters, as general manager, the Metropolitan theater, which closed its doors Saturday night, will open again on Monday, February 20, under the banner of the National Amusement company.

This new company, which leased the Metropolitan theater Saturday from its owners, is composed of many of the best-known and most substantial theatrical men in the south. It will operate the theater under a policy of "pictures first, last and all the time."

Firm in the belief that a straight picture policy is the popular one in Atlanta, the new company plans to show not only the most pretentious feature pictures, but a fine and varied program of short subjects as well—and do it at moderate prices.

The opening attraction will be Warner Bros. greatest new film, Al Jolson in "The Jazz Singer." It is not only a tremendous story, but it is presented with the embellishments of the new Vitaphone and is declared to be one of the most effective works the films have achieved.

A staff of technicians will go to work Monday in thoroughly modernizing the Metropolitan's Vitaphone equipment, and officials say there will be a general brightening up of the house and a new, aggressive and tireless-to-please policy.

ARKANSAS MAN FACES 4TH TERM ON LIQUOR COUNT

Little Rock, Ark., February 11.—(AP)—Life for Charles Journeys is just one pen term after another. Nearing his 70th birthday, blind in one eye and feeble, Journeys, a resident of Little Rock, today faced his fourth term in the state penitentiary because he "can't help but make liquor." He was arrested today when a large still was found at his home. He served three terms in the Arkansas penitentiary, having been released the last time only a few months ago and at least two in the federal prison in Atlanta.

Sonora Official Seeks Local Talent For Records; New Phonograph Promised

Left to right, C. D. MacKinnon, sales manager of the record division of the Sonora Phonograph company, Inc., and four southeastern salesmen he has appointed during a visit to Atlanta—Al J. Allen, with Georgia and southern South Carolina as his territory; Clyde K. Wyatt, Florida and south Georgia; J. W. Woodward, North Carolina and northern South Carolina, and H. N. Crane, Alabama.

With announcement that the Sonora Phonograph company, Inc., nationally famous makers of phonographs, this summer will put on the market a new line of instruments radically different in performance and principle, as well as in cabinet appearance, and will begin manufacture of Sonora records, C. D. MacKinnon, sales manager of the company's record division, is in Atlanta lining up talent for recording of records.

"I have been in Atlanta for some time getting in communication with local talent for recording of songs and music that are typical of the south," Mr. MacKinnon said Saturday. "I am convinced that this type of record, which already has attained tremendous volume in sales, is destined to be even more popular."

"The rhythmic, old-fashioned tunes already popular in the south, I have been trying for two years to get northern dealers to press their sale, and I now note a general disappearing of opposition to such a course. As a result, I am convinced that southern songs are going to become more greatly in demand all over the country than they now are."

'Frolics' Girls Model Garments Of Van Raalte

Sixteen beautiful Atlanta girls will model the newest styles of Van Raalte underwear in the gorgeous "lingerie" number which is a feature of The Atlanta Constitution-Loew's Grand Frolics produced by Victor Hyde. "The Frolics" will be the headline attraction at the theater starting Monday. The lingerie worn in the number is furnished from the store of Chamberlin-Johnson-DuRose company, local dealers in Van Raalte wearing apparel.

The "lingerie" number is a miniature style show of the season's latest styles of silk underwear and hosiery. The routine is one of intricate steps in rhythm to a beautiful arranged song, which will be sung by Robina Astin.

Features of the garments displayed by the revue will be the famous singlet, one of Van Raalte's practical and style-right undergarments, and the equally famous Van Raalte silk hosiery in opera length, favorites of the smart women.

According to the dealers in Van Raalte women's wear here, the famous singlet perfectly replaces three garments—bra, vest and bloomers; makes the frock fit smoother; helps to slenderize the figure, and is the acme of style and comfort.

Singlets in coral or flesh tone with breeches or step-in knee; in black for wear with black evening or daytime frocks, both will be worn by members of the "Frolics" during the routines of the beautiful "lingerie" number.

Full Dress Rehearsals Today Of Constitution-Grand Frolics

DIRECTOR HYDE GREATLY PLEASED WITH TALENT OF CONSTITUTION-GRAND FROLICS

Full dress rehearsals of The Constitution-Loew's Grand Frolics will be held today preparatory to opening Monday at the Loew theater with a cast composed exclusively of local talent. Every detail of the routine of the company has been worked out to perfection under the excellent direction of Victor Hyde, Broadway producer, who is staging the show.

Authorities and newspapermen who have seen this show in rehearsal predict that it will be one of the greatest bits of entertainment ever seen in Atlanta. An unusually talented group of girls and boys were selected by Mr. Hyde from more than 250 applicants for positions in the cast.

First rehearsals were begun yesterday after Mr. Hyde's arrival and he rapidly whipped his pupils into almost professional performers. By Friday night they were dismissed until today, after having been pronounced "excellent" by the famous director.

"The Constitution-Loew's Grand Frolics should be one of the finest shows Atlanta has seen," Mr. Hyde said Saturday. "In all my experience at directing shows using new talent, I have not come across a finer group of young folks who are willing to work every minute of the rehearsal time."

Elaborate settings for the show will arrive here this morning and will be "hung" immediately on the Loew's Grand stage previous to the afternoon and night rehearsals of the cast. The Loew organization has spared no expense in making the Frolics the finest show of its kind Atlanta has seen.

It will be featured all week at Loew's Grand.

And it is happiness that has come to stay because the Maytag is built for a lifetime of service. It is the only washer with a non-breakable, cast-aluminum tub—the tub that keeps water hot for an entire washing, then empties and cleans itself.

Because of the silent, smooth-running, steel-cut gears, and the fine engineering in every part, there is a remarkable absence of vibration, and vibration is a washer's greatest enemy.

Would you know washday happiness, try a Maytag. See the new soft Roller Water Remover with safety feed board and automatic tension adjustment—test and compare its many outstanding features.

CAROLINIANS FACE NEW BLUE SUNDAY

Columbia, S. C., February 11.—(AP) Placed on their good behavior by Governor Richards, South Carolinians went to bed tonight looking forward to a modified resumption tomorrow of the "blue Sunday" regime instituted by the chief executive a year ago shortly after he took office.

There was obvious, however, a feeling of uncertainty, just how deep a shade of blue would be in vogue. The governor, in the only announcement he has made upon the subject, stated enforcement of the laws, for the time being at least, would be left to local officials and his own staff of constables would not be called into service. They were last year when numerous arrests were made for alleged violations of the state's ancient statutes, some of which have a history that runs back to 1641.

Court Made Ruling.
Recessedness of the "closed Sunday" is in consequence of a ruling handed down recently by the supreme court that the sale of any merchandise on Sunday, including gasoline, which was the item in question, is unlawful except in cases of necessity or charity, and unless required by the burden of determining just what is a case of necessity, subject to review by a jury. At the same time the court held that non-commercial playing of golf on Sunday was legal, with certain restrictions.

JADWIN FAVORS MOVING VILLAGE IN FLOOD ZONE

Washington, February 11.—(AP) One way to prevent a town from being flooded is to move it away from the water, and this method was recommended to congress today by Major General Jadwin, of the army engineers, who wants to solve the vexing problem faced by Afognak, Alaska. The general advised a house committee that Afognak did not have commerce enough to justify the expenditures necessary for a seawall, but that the entire community could be moved for $50,000. The village is only five feet above sea level at extreme high water and frequently is inundated by storms.

Local Camp Fire Girls Plan Recreation Center at Beautiful Toccoa Falls, Ga.

Camp Fire Girls are shown above in two of the organization's numerous activities. At the left three members of the archery class are seen comparing "hits," while a group about to plunge into the "old swimmin' hole" is at the right.

A meeting of the Camp Fire Girls' advisory board was held in the Chamber of Commerce building recently for the purpose of discussing plans for a summer camp to be built on the site at Toccoa Falls, Ga., which was secured last summer for this purpose. Mrs. Tom Brooke, president of Camp Fire Girls, explained to the board the rapid growth of this organization since its beginning about four and a half years ago and cited the needs for a summer camp.

The Camp Fire Girls is a national organization for girls in their teens or adolescent age. Physicians and scientists say this is the character-building and habit-forming age. Fifteen years ago Dr. and Mrs. Gulick, directors of physical education in the New York city public schools, organized Camp Fire Girls, the object being to take girls at this age and instill into them the ideals of correct habits of living and thinking. Leaders or guardians were trained for this purpose and the result has been a nationwide organization of Camp Fire Girls.

Four and one half years ago Camp Fire Girls were organized in Atlanta with a membership of 65 and the membership now totals 450 girls and 41 guardians in Atlanta and suburbs. The programs for Camp Fire Girls activities are based on "girl psychology" and the guardians are usually teachers or mothers in the community where the group is formed. Development of high ideals regarding home, health and citizenship is the object and aim of this organization. In addition to the social and athletic programs, Camp Fire Girls have taken an active part in charity, giving donations of books, magazines and baskets to the Home of the Incurable, Scottish Rite Hospital for Crippled Children and the Family Welfare society.

Assisted Other Groups.

They have assisted the League of Women Voters and the Better Homes committee by serving as ushers and they take an active interest in the American Tree association, the planting of memorial trees forest conservation and live Christmas trees being projects on yearly programs. Camp Fire Girls groups are active in all parts of the city and girls between the ages of 11 and 16 are eligible. Only a nominal expense is incurred and groups have been organized in many communities.

LABOR HEAD FLAYS USE OF INJUNCTION

Washington, February 11.—(AP) A picture of organized labor writhing in discontent because of the issuance by equity courts of injunctions against its activities a practice which the Shipstead bill seeks to restrict, was drawn before a senate judiciary subcommittee today by President Green, of the American Federation of Labor. Meanwhile, the senate interstate commerce committee failed to get a quorum for expected action on another phase of the labor question, the resolution of Senator Johnson, republican, California, for an investigation of the situation in Pennsylvania, West Virginia and Ohio bituminous coal fields. Chairman Watson, of that committee, has declared that an inquiry would be ordered, and this is expected to materialize Monday.

Years Destruction of Unions. Green's case for the bill of Senator Shipstead, farmer-labor, Minnesota, was backed up by John Frey, secretary-treasurer of the metal trades department of the American Federation of Labor, who declared that abuse of the injunction writ in labor disputes had resulted in the most serious problem that the country has faced since the negro slavery issue. "A 'Frankenstein' has been created through the medium of the courts," Frey said, "which threatens to prevent labor from organizing and to destroy present organizations."

Georgia Graduate Nurses Must Register by Feb. 20

Only a few more days remain for graduate nurses of Georgia to register with the state board of examiners, under the waiver of the compulsory registration law passed by the Georgia assembly last August. Nurses who have not yet registered and who desire to take advantage of a special opportunity may do so at once by making application to the secretary of the board at 106 Forrest avenue, N. E.

BAKING ISN'T THE BOTHER IT USED TO BE

Without giving the matter a second thought, any woman would select a modern gas, electric or coal stove in preference to an old fashioned "mud oven" that our grandmothers used. She can see a big improvement. It is just as plain as day. Now, there has been just as great an improvement in baking powder as there has been in stoves and it is more important too. Because you can bake in almost any sort of an oven, but you can't produce the finest of bakings without the best of baking powder. Many women do not realize how much has been accomplished in the production of leaveners, because all baking powder looks like baking powder.

CALUMET THE WORLD'S GREATEST BAKING POWDER

To the sight, Calumet is merely ordinary baking powder. But in results, in baking ease and certainty it proves itself superior to all other leavening mediums and supplies baking convenience that no housewife who values her time, health and happiness can afford to be without.

Calumet is Double Acting. Contains two leavening units. One begins to work when the dough is mixed; the other waits for the heat of the oven, then both units work together.

VENDETTA FEARED IN MAINE SLAYING

Portland, Me., February 11.—(AP) The possibility that Joseph Rain, whose body was found with four bullet wounds today in a room in Hotel Florence, was a vendetta victim, was being investigated by police and county officials tonight.

They were attempting to check reports that Rain, who came from Italy 25 years ago, had shot a man through the mouth in Boston several years ago, inflicting a wound similar to one of those which caused his own death. The shots were heard by no one in the hotel. Search was being made for a man known here only as "Charlie from New York," whom the officials desired to question. He was said to have been seen talking with Rain in the hotel office last night.

Lookout Mountain Hotel Is Acquired By Dinkler Hotel Company of Atlanta

Lookout mountain hotel now nearing completion on the top of the historic long trip.

Lookout Mountain hotel, now nearing completion at a cost of $1,500,000, on top of the mountain just inside the Georgia boundary line, and which will be one of the largest and most beautiful resort hotels in the country, has been acquired by the Dinkler Hotel Company, of Atlanta. Carlisle L. Dinkler, head of the big chain hotel organization, announced Saturday that his company would operate the hotel and that it would be completed by May 15 and ready for the formal opening date early in June.

The big hotel, being erected on the highest knoll on top of the famous mountain, is more than 2,500 feet above sea level and looks down on the city of Chattanooga, 1,700 feet below. The structure is in the center of a large tract of land that lies along the border of Georgia and Tennessee, in Dale county, Georgia, and is within a few minutes ride of more than a score of the most picturesque and historical points in eastern America. It is a 20-minute ride from the heart of Chattanooga, along a paved path that is brilliantly lighted the entire ten miles and that winds along the scarp with the Tennessee river stretching lazily hundreds of feet below.

The newest link in the Dinkler group of famous hotels, which now extend from Danville, Ill., to Jacksonville, Fla., will be one of the most luxuriously furnished and one of the most modern summer hotels in the United States. The interior will be a veritable show place of magnificent furniture and fine furnishings, while the exterior is of English design and after the tavern type. The first unit of the structure, which will be completed soon, will comprise 250 rooms, each with private bath, electric lights, circulating water and every other known convenience for a hotel guest. The grounds are being beautified under direction of a New York landscape artist and will be a fairland of flowers, shrubbery and decorative work.

The building is five stories, with rooms and suites of varying sizes on each floor, including music room, main dining and ball rooms, card rooms, a swimming pool and a wide terrace practically encircling the entire large building.

Adjoining the hotel properties is a fine golf course of 18 holes and near the hotel and one of the features it will offer will be a lake three miles in length which will permit bathing, boating and various water sports. A riding academy already is operating with a noted instructor and guide who daily take parties for long trips over the 16-mile-top mountain.

The hotel will have ample garage and storage space, in addition to its 250 guest rooms, with barber shops, a beauty parlor and other small shops—all under direction of experts in their respective work. The wide terrace will be used for dining space when desired, while a large dining room to care for upwards of 500 persons will be used mainly for dinners and dances.

Although the personnel of the new Dinkler hotel has not been selected, it is known that a hotel man of wide experience who has been connected with some of the biggest America resort and tourist hotels, will be selected soon to manage the house for the summer period. It also is probable, Mr. Dinkler said, that some plan may be worked out whereby the house will be kept open 12 months in the year. Preparations are being made for the opening early in June, probably about June 10.

PLAYS PIPE ORGAN, LOSES BELFRY HOME BUT WINS FRIEND

New York, February 11.—(AP)—A chance to become a regular pipe organist has been offered Fred Nolte, 23, who betrayed his sleeping quarters in a church belfry when he succumbed to an urge to play the organ in the unoccupied church.

Nolte was taken to jail when he said he had neither home nor means of support. Emil Velasco, radio organ recitalist, however, has asked the church pastor not to prosecute the youth and offers to assist him in getting work and instruct him in pipe organ playing to fit him for a lucrative position.

WORD "INTERVENTION" STIRS NEW DEBATE

Havana, February 11.—(United Press.)—The word "intervention" can be dropped from Latin-American dictionaries of international terms as far as some delegates from that section of the world are concerned, they indicated today in a controversy before the international law committee of the Pan-American congress.

Ill repute of the word which has come to be so frequently used in connection with United States policy in Latin-America caused one hour of explanations, strong comment and statements by leading delegates on the committee. The word was used in connection with an abstract question in no way affecting the general principle of intervention. Finally a vote of the committee on the word permitted work of the congress to continue.

Nations Oppose Word.

Even then, when they had been assured that intervention was an innocent word, delegates from Ecuador, Mexico, Salvador and Bolivia voted to get along without it just as much as possible.

Hector Davis Castro, delegates from Salvador, was first to become suspicious. Soon after the reading of article 13, of the general law of treaties, the subject under discussion, he let his suspicion become known.

Orestes Ferrera, Cuban delegate, who made the report containing the word of ill repute, said he was trying to help weak nations and that Castro, in asking modification, was misinformed.

Charles E. Hughes, United States delegate, then entered the discussion. "That guarantee, when given," he said, "will be maintained." His statement being taken as a declaration of United States foreign policy.

KEWANEE The Ace of the Boiler Field

The real cost of a heating boiler is not the price you pay when you buy it—but the money you invest in its operation over a period of years.

Even if the price of the KEWANEE ALL-STEEL FIREBOX BOILER were immeasurably greater than it is, it would be an insignificant sum compared with the savings this boiler effects in fuel.

It is true that you can buy some other type of boiler for less money than a Kewanee costs—but that would be false economy unless the boiler can perform as well as the Kewanee. We never have been able to find one in forty years of experience.

A cheap boiler is always a cheap boiler and for that reason it can't do the same work as a boiler of perfect design and lasting qualities. You can save on the materials in your building if you wish but you can't accomplish anything but expense if you choose a boiler because of its first cost.

The Kewanee All-steel Firebox boiler is designed and built to outlast the building. In the vast majority of cases it does. Moreover, it will burn any kind or grade of fuel. If you are a big user of fuel, think this statement over seriously.

The saving it effects, because of its scientific design and superior workmanship, easily reaches 25 per cent. Just imagine how this saving grows over a long period of time. When other boilers are succumbing to atmospheric conditions, creating distress and untold inconvenience, the Kewanee Boiler pursues the even tenor of its way and earns its first cost many many times by the excellent service it renders.

If you want details and proof, write the Old Man Behind the Boiler and get the information he has collected during an experience of 40 years in steel boiler making.

STATE LOSES STAR IN JACKSON TRIAL

Indianapolis, Ind., February 11.—(AP)—The prosecution in the trial of Governor Ed Jackson lost one of its star witnesses today when Robert W. Lyons, Richmond attorney, and former financial agent of the Ku Klux Klan, underwent an operation for appendicitis at Dayton, Ohio.

Loss of Lyons' testimony, however, will not weaken the state's case against the governor, who is charged with conspiracy to commit a felony in an attempt to bribe, Prosecutor William H. Remy, declared. It strengthened the belief that D. C. Stephenson, former grand dragon of the Klan and now in Indiana state prison, might be the first witness for the prosecution.

Named in Bribery Plot.
Stephenson was named in the Jackson indictment as having been a party to the alleged conspiracy to bribe Governor Warren T. McCray in 1923 to name James E. McDonald as Marion county prosecutor. Robert L. Marsh, local attorney, and George V. Coffin, Marion county republican chairman, were indicted with Jackson. They will be tried later.

Lyons' reasons for being outside the state underwent investigation yesterday by the prosecutor. Investigators found Lyons in a hospital. He said he had left a train at Dayton while en route home from the east, because of illness. The operation was made this morning.

The trial, which was halted late Friday with 11 men in the jury box who apparently were acceptable to both state and defense, will be resumed Monday morning.

'Totem Tom Tom' Number Is Feature Of 'Rose Marie,' Here for Second Week

A small portion of the ensemble of 40 in the "Rose Marie" company which plays its second week at the Erlanger theater this week. They are seen in one of the "Totem Tom Tom" dance formations in the number which has created a sensation in the musical comedy world.

Presenting the spectacular "Totem Tom Tom" number, the gifted ensemble of the "Rose Marie" company, which Monday enters its second and final week at the Erlanger theater, weaves, in its sinuous windings, a gorgeous skein of beauty and pagentry before the very eyes of audiences.

Hailed as the most novel and unique bit of ballet work that a musical comedy stage has offered in the last 20 years, those who visit the Erlanger this week will find the "Totem Tom Tom" number the original of the score of imitations they have seen. The striking thing about this number and the thing which makes its extraordinary effectiveness, is the size of the ensemble. More than 40 pretty girls, dressed like Totem poles, and in a hundred variegated designs and colors, participate in the number.

Beginning Its Routine.
The entire and opening of the number is routine enough, with the regular military drill which may be seen in almost any production. But in that bit which follows, introducing the sinuous caterpillar movement, the audience bursts into deafening and spontaneous applause.

Intensive training is required so that every movement shall be timed to the exact instant in which it will be a part of a thousand others, because if it falls—never did, last week—the effect of the whole scheme is utterly ruined.

The girls form in file, extending half-moon fashion across the stage. Each girl grasps the elbow of the girl in front of her, extending the arm straight from the shoulder, and forming a perfect ninety-degree crook at the elbow.

Then the leader lowers her left arm a trifle and raises the right correspondingly—and a wave of motion, beautiful and striking ripples down the line—perfect! astounding!

Another outstanding movement from the same formation. Received great applause last week. The girls seat themselves in the same half-moon fashion around the stage, and the leader falls on her left side, striking her neighbor who falls quickly in the same manner. This action, followed by every one of the 40 girls, is so spectacular that it is impossible to convey even a remote impression of its beauty. One must see it.

And there's nothing easy about this number. To "go over" the action must be perfect, and to achieve that, the persons must be trained to a split hair. But the "Rose-Marie" company and director have made the failure of this number absolutely impossible.

Each girl as she falls, strikes her neighbor a good, resounding blow, pushing her over. The whole movement is over in a flash, but the impact of the bodies recalls vividly days of line bucks—it's no easy life—this "lady of the ensemble" stuff, and particularly not so in the "Totem Tom Tom" ensemble.

There are many other equally impressive movements in the number, but they, as the two mentioned, so completely defy description, that the joy of witnessing them is left to you. You won't want to miss it.

And it's only an integral part of a great show—this "Rose-Marie!"

Georgia Baptists Plan
'Jubilee Celebration'

Completion of local organization in all Baptist churches of Georgia for a "jubilee celebration" of the fiftieth anniversary year of the denomination's Georgia state board of missions is expected by March 1 and on March 7, the jubilee chairman of all district Baptist associations in Georgia will meet in Atlanta to report upon the progress of the Georgia Baptist headquarters announced here Saturday.

The Atlanta gathering has been called to take place in the Baptist Tabernacle, and on the same day at the same place it is planned to present a "jubilee day" program, provided in connection with the Tabernacle Bible conference. Speakers listed for the jubilee event are Governor L. G. Hardman, Dr. M. E. Dodd, of Shreveport, La.; Dr. J. C. Masse, of Boston; Dr. J. T. Henderson, of Knoxville, Tennessee.

It was further announced Saturday that on March 11 and 15 Baptists throughout the state will hold special prayer meetings in the interest of the anniversary celebration and of the denomination's mission work.

State Committee Meetings.
A state committee authorized at the Georgia Baptist convention in August during December has held a number of meetings in Atlanta. Baptist headquarters said, working out a statewide plan of organization for the "jubilee" observance. The plan is to have a "jubilee" chairman in every district association and in every local church. Through these two groups of leaders the plan for celebrating the "year of jubilee" will be laid before the 400,000 white Baptists of the state.

Regional conferences have already been held throughout the state, setting up the associational organizations, and now the associational chairmen are holding conferences to perfect organization in every local church, it was explained in the announcement.

VICTIM OF SHOT WILL RECOVER; AVIATRIX FREED

Miss Gladys Poole, of 97 Lakewood terrace, student aviatrix who was arrested Friday night on a blanket charge of suspicion after James William Johnston, of Birmingham, Ala., shot himself in the chest, was released Saturday afternoon by police in the custody of her father.

Johnston, in the Piedmont sanitarium, said Saturday that he shot himself accidentally while he was holding the revolver by the barrel as he raised the lid of a suitcase. The lid fell, striking the gun and causing the discharge, he said. Physicians said he would recover.

Miss Poole told police that the shooting came as a climax to a "party" held in Johnston's room, and that she and Johnston had planned to be married as soon as he obtained a divorce from his present wife, from whom he is separated.

Candler Opposes Public Utilities Probe of Senate

With reference to an investigation of the public utilities industry proposed by United States Senator Walsh, of Montana, and which will be presented to the United States senate, William Candler, prominent Atlanta business man, and director representing the southeastern states on the board of the United States chamber of commerce, Saturday in a communication to the national headquarters of that organization, expressed an opinion that the proposed investigation would do more harm than good if the senate permits it to be conducted along the lines Senator Walsh outlined.

In his communication, Mr. Candler pointed out that the government has,

In the federal trade commission, a body of a number of leading scientists and investigators and the body conducts investigations for the express purpose of bringing to light facts rather than apparent purposes of airing in newspapers sensational charges that may never be proven.

'Our people in Georgia have a direct interest in this matter,' he said. 'It has been made against the utilities in this state, but if the investigation is conducted as Senator Walsh would like to conduct it, it will certainly react against our local public utilities and affect unfavorably their interests. It will also reflect unfavorably on Atlanta and Georgia generally at home and abroad, and also adversely affect our industry and the state of Georgia.' He said that the utilities in Georgia have planned large programs of development and that the state has been very successful in it. He said that he believed that it was and it is to be hoped that it will be possible for these entire programs to be carried out without hindrance from the sources cuttied above.

Edith Parker, Atlanta girl, who has been a vaudeville favorite for several years, will again play before the footlights at the Grand theatre, on the night of February 20, and soon after will leave on a European theatrical tour.

This was learned Saturday in a letter from Atlanta friends from Miss Parker, whose stage name is Elsie Calmes and who for three years has been on the Keith circuit with Fred Balch, the other member of the company.

Miss Parker is the daughter of Mrs. Belle M. Calmes, of 38 Lawton street. The woman said she has signed a contract for a European tour with her act, but prior to going abroad will appear on the Lowie circuit, opening here at the Grand theatre, February 20. Miss Parker is a very popular actress and her many friends will be interested to learn of her early return and her scheduled tour of Europe.

Brussels, Belgium, February 11.—The visit to Belgium of the king and queen of Afghanistan, eastern potentates who have been the center of much of the world's interest in this group, has been curtailed because of the health of each.

The queen, who broke the custom of her land by laying aside the dress of a sari and wearing a Western gown for some days, Ammaullah Khan suffered from his throat during the dinner he gave yesterday in honor of the Belgian monarch. A severe cold, coughed developed which made it impossible for him to hutton his tunic.

The Belgian sovereign and each of his children, however, remained in the capital tonight where they boarded a train for Switzerland in the hope that the higher altitudes might improve their health.

The royal party arrived in Paris last Wednesday.

FIND AUTOMOBILE OF LOST DEPUTIES

Lafayette, Ind., February 11.—(AP)—The trail of John Burns and Samuel Baxter, youthful convicts who disappeared Tuesday, was definitely followed to Decatur, Ill., today when the automobile of John P. Grove, a deputy sheriff, was found in a garage there.

The fate, however, of Grove and Wallace McClure, another deputy, who dropped from sight while transporting the prisoners to the Pendleton, Ind., reformatory, still was a mystery.

A hat bearing the initials "J. P. G." and identified as belonging to Grove, and a belt from a corduroy coat, believed to have been worn by Burns, were picked up on a road near Maple Point, two and a half miles east of here. Authorities said this indicated that the prisoners began a fight for freedom immediately after leaving Lafayette.

The automobile found at Decatur bore the Indiana license of Grove's car, 475-475. There was a bullet hole in the lower right-hand corner of the windshield, but there were no other evidences of a struggle. The car was left at the garage last Tuesday by two men. Burns and Baxter previously had spent a short time in Danville, Ill., riding in an automobile similar to the one located at Decatur.

Identification of the automobile was the result of telegrams sent to a score of middle western cities last night by the state bureau of criminal identification at Indianapolis. The telegrams, followed by printed matter sent by mail, gave a description of the missing prisoners and the automobile.

The courtship was begun through the offices of a matrimonial agency. Before leaving, Hammett said the widow was well-to-do, lived on a farm and played a harp in the local church at Indianola.

TROTSKY MISTAKEN FOR "MILLIONAIRE" AS EXILE BEGINS

Moscow, February 11.—(AP)—The arrival of Leon Trotsky, former Soviet leader, at his place of exile in a special car encountered with 70 pieces of baggage caused the natives to suppose that he was an American millionaire, says the correspondent of the official Tass agency.

The correspondent said that Trotsky and his family traveled in "bonded comfort" to France, where his exile is to be spent. Besides his baggage, he took a hunting dog and considerable hunting equipment.

The thousands who gathered at the city hall to witness her official introduction to the mayor and see the movies of this event filmed, followed her to the Rich store and kept the display window fronts packed throughout the day. Having supervised the unpacking of her trunk by her maid, Miss Kirby went on a shopping expedition in the store, being followed there by the curious throngs.

In the afternoon she was hostess to dancing pupils of Nellie Sullivan at a Valentine party and at night was entertained by the Rich store quartet.

"International relationships are primarily business relationships. Most wars are business wars. If all business practices and principles were on a high plane, there would be little cause for the business men of any nation failing to trust those of another."

Mr. Sapp pointed out that the Rotary idea was spreading into all parts of Europe and in many sections has been flourishing for a number of years. Mr. Sapp, on his tour, visited clubs in Paris, Como, Rome, Vienna, Prague, Copenhagen, Norway, and Sweden.

"It is not easy to visualize Rotary in Hungary, Austria and Czechoslovakia," said Mr. Sapp, "but at a recent conference held in Prague, which I officiated, the fine, most imaginable was displayed. At Zurich conference, all the Rotary countries of Europe spent two days in search and study into the ideals and mechanics of the Rotary movement with an eye to peace and understanding among the nations there represented."

"Wherever Rotary goes, we insist on the same ideas. We believe a Rotarian should be a good citizen. We ask that he interest himself in the affairs of his city, state and nation in international business practice."

These included three clubs in Germany, at Hamburg, Cologne and Frankfurt, the three principal business centers of the country.

"We are interested particularly in international relations and in promotion of international peace through a greater understanding. In this movement we are proceeding along two lines, the promotion of higher standards in international business practice."

Jaycees Planning Six-Room House For Home Exhibit

The interior of Taft hall at the Atlanta auditorium will be almost filled by a six-room bungalow of brick, tile and other clay products during the approaching Southern Building and Household exposition, if plans of the Junior Chamber of Commerce are carried to completion, it was announced Saturday by L. R. Hunter, chairman of the committee in charge of the big "home show" scheduled for March 19 to 24.

Details are being worked out by the Southern Clay Products association, composed of leading manufacturers of brick and tile and similar building material, to erect inside of Taft hall a substantial exhibit home which will be the very last word in construction and equipment," said Mr. Hunter. "It will require several weeks to erect the house, which must be destroyed immediately after the show, but the association believes it will be well worth while to invest thousands of dollars in showing to prospective home builders the possibilities of brick and tile construction."

More than a third of the exhibit space in the main auditorium already has been reserved for the exhibit. They include prominent manufacturers and dealers in every type of building material, household equipment, furniture and fixtures, and everything that goes into the making of a thoroughly modern home.

The committee of the Junior Chamber of Commerce, which is sponsoring the show, will convene the entire city within the next ten days and expects to fill every foot of floor space in the big building with displays from manufacturer and merchant.

HOME FOR GIRLS SHOWS HELPFUL WORK IN JANUARY

Presented as an illustration of the constructive and helpful philanthropy practiced by agencies of the community, the Community Home for Girls was announced Saturday, showing happy marriages, productive careers, and successful employment, among the products of the operation of the institution.

The home, a haven for girls in which lives and careers are reconstructed, reported sheltering 32 girls during the month. Of these, according to Mrs. P. H. Lopez, its secretary, eight are attending school, taking advantage of the opportunity for training which was neglected or denied in earlier years and one was directed to useful self-support which she had not attained before. The others are gainfully employed and happy, according to the report.

Several of the girls of the home were happily married in the last year, according to the review by Mrs. Lopez of activities for 1927, and are making attractive homes for themselves. The activities of the home were described as including domestic service, games and parties, and religious service with church attendance and family prayers. Vocational guidance and home-making are other fields of instruction, and close friendly contact is maintained by the matron, Mrs. J. B. Hester, and other members of the governing board with the lives of girls who have dwelt there.

Girl Gets Big "Kick" Out of Liquor Trial; Is Held Under Bond

Margaret Hudson, 18, of 178 Georgia avenue got quite a "kick" out of her appearance before United States Commissioner L. S. Ledbetter Saturday afternoon on prohibition charges, she told deputy United States marshals.

Charged with possessing 78 1-2 gallons of whisky under her house, she was held for the federal grand jury under $200 bond, which she posted readily. She was described by herself to officers as the "lone wolf" of Atlanta liquor sellers. She told officers that she had been on trips to the mountains for the whisky and handled everything herself.

Lucille Hall, colored, of 230 Butler street, was bound over $300 bond for alleged possession of 20 gallons of whisky in cans, concealed in a floor trap. Della Maxwell, colored, of 30 Butler street, was held under $100 bond on liquor charges.

Prescription He Wrote in 1892 is the World's Most Popular Laxative

When Dr. Caldwell started to practice medicine back in 1875, the needs for a laxative were not as great as they are today. People lived normal, quiet lives, ate plain, wholesome food, and got plenty of fresh air and sunshine. But even that early there were drastic physical and purges for the relief of constipation which Dr. Caldwell did not believe were good for human beings to put into their system. So he wrote a prescription for a laxative to be used by his patients.

The prescription for constipation that he used early in his practice, and which he put in drug-stores in 1892 under the name of Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, is a liquid vegetable remedy, intended for women, children and elderly people, and they need just such a mild, safe, gentle bowel stimulant as Syrup Pepsin.

Under successful management this prescription has proven its worth and is now the largest selling liquid laxative in the world. The fact that millions of bottles are used a year proves that it has won the confidence of people who have needed relief from headache, biliousness, flatulence, indigestion, loss of appetite and sleep, bad breath, dyspepsia, colic and fever.

Millions of families are now never without Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, and if you will once start using it you will also always have a bottle handy for emergencies.

wide improvements during his years of service, and at the same time has fostered outstanding improvements in his own ward.

He was an active advocate of the $840,000 bond issue for civic improvements in 1924, and of the Pryor street and Central avenue viaducts, construction of which will begin within the next few weeks.

"If honored again by voters of the city, I pledge the same conscientious, business-like service which characterized my two terms as alderman, which are just ending," Mr. Buchanan said in making his announcement prior to leaving for a trip to New York.

"My record is an open book and I shall predicate my claims for reelection on it. I am proud of the record of service which is written in the minutes of city council, and if the people of Atlanta honor me again I shall continue to serve them to the best of my ability."

Announcement of Mr. Buchanan is the first official entry into the primary since the committee Thursday set June 6 as the date on which it will be held. Interest in the city campaigns is not expected to be kept until after the county races slated for March 7.

DR. H. C. HARDAGREE SUCCEEDS HERNDON AS LEGION OFFICER

Dr. Herndon, who has been prominently identified with legion affairs in Atlanta for the last several years, is leaving this city to become regional director of the Veterans' bureau at San Antonio, Texas.

In appreciation of Dr. Herndon's services to the American Legion, the local post presented to him a handsome desk set with a gold embossed American Legion emblem.

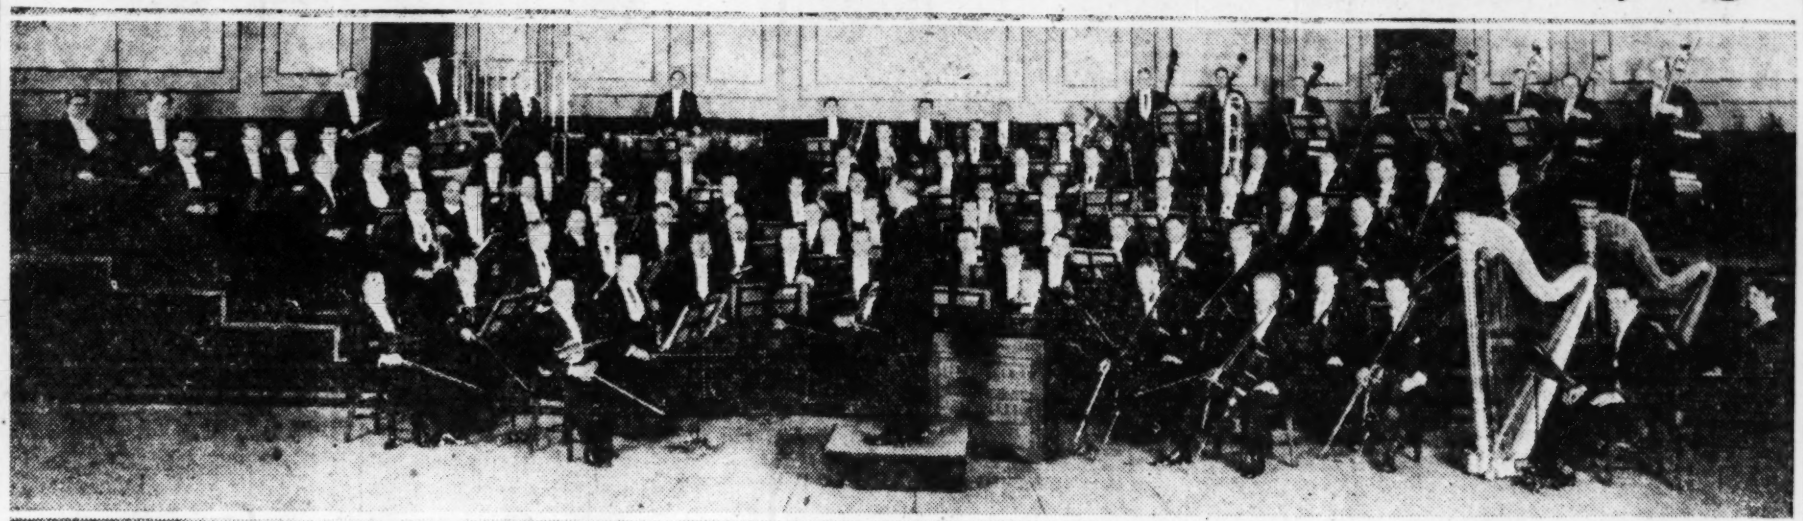

The meeting Friday was one of the best attended in months, fully 300 veterans witnessing the legion extravaganza, "A Night in Paris."

Cleveland Symphony Orchestra, Great Musical Organization Of 80 Pieces, Will Play Before an Atlanta Audience Friday Night

The great Cleveland Symphony orchestra of eighty pieces, Nikolai Sokoloff, conductor, which will play Friday night at the auditorium and possibly Friday afternoon in a special matinee for children.

BY RALPH T. JONES.

The Cleveland Symphony orchestra, one of the three greatest instrumental organizations in America today, will come to Atlanta next Friday, giving a magnificent night program and probably a special matinee performance for children in the afternoon. Both concerts will be given at the auditorium.

Under the baton of Nikolai Sokoloff, who has been pronounced by the leading musical publications as the greatest conductor now before the American public, the orchestra of over 80 pieces will bring to Atlanta a program combining classic, modern and emotional music to a remarkable degree. Works by Mozart, Bloch, Rimsky-Korsakoff and Debussy are included and the result should be an evening both memorable and felicitous among all classes of music lovers and lovers of all classes of music.

Atlanta this season is particularly hungry for symphonic music, since circumstances made it impossible to hold the usual series of concerts by the local orchestra and it is already evident that the auditorium next Friday night will witness one of the largest and most representative concert audiences of several seasons past.

Music Bureau Attraction. The orchestra comes here as one of the attractions in the artist series sponsored by the Southern Music bureau, and season tickets for this series are good for the night performance. Seats for the single performance will go on sale Monday morning at the Cable Piano company on North Broad street.

Conductor Sokoloff is one of the most picturesque figures in the modern musical world. Born in Russia, he began studying the violin at 5 years of age and at 7 was playing in the Keiff Municipal orchestra, touring Russia with that organization and remaining with the orchestra until his parents decided to move to America.

Young Nikolai was still a mere boy when he landed at New York, able to spell out only a few words of English and feeling lonely and hopeless in a strange land.

In his wanderings about the metropolis he tells today how he spotted out a sign which told of a competition for violinists at Yale university. It took him, he says, many days of "odd-jobs" to save the price of a $3 fiddle. Finally, with his cheap instrument—but with the divine spark of musical genius speaking from his soul through its strings—he made his way to Yale. Only to discover that the competition had been concluded weeks before.

Scholarship at Yale. However, the music professor there consented to hear him play. A few strains were sufficient to reveal to rare talent of the lad. A scholarship was arranged and Sokoloff's career had begun.

Four years later he was in the first violin section of the Boston Symphony, and was a pupil of Charles Martin Loeffler, teacher and composer. Years later he went to Paris to study under Vincent D'Indy, leader of the French modernist school.

Then came a successful concert tour of France and England and an invitation to become conductor of the symphony orchestra of Manchester.

He returned to America in 1911 as concert master of the Russian Symphony orchestra. A few years later San Francisco asked him to come west as leader of a string quartet and later proffered the conductorship of its Philharmonic orchestra, which post he held until the world war, when he resigned to go overseas to play for the American and British forces.

On his return to America he was conducting a season at the Cincinnati zoo, when the Musical Arts association of Cleveland, invited him to come to America to survey the ground with a view to establishing a Cleveland orchestra.

The First Cleveland Orchestra. In order to help a Cleveland pastor provide a money-raising concert for his church, Sokoloff organized a band of 57 musicians, rehearsed them seven times and gave the first Cleveland orchestra concert.

Now, with nearly 90 of the greatest musicians in the country performing under his magic baton, he heads an orchestra which stands in the foremost group of organizations of its kind in the world. It is an orchestra that has won unstinted praise from the greatest critics and which, since its comparatively recent creation, has developed a coordination and spirit sense which gives to its interpretations an appeal, charm and authority few orchestral groups can claim.

With large delegations already writing for blocks of seats, from colleges of the state and nearby towns, and with many Atlantans also inquiring about seat reservations, S. Russell Bridges, president of the Southern Music bureau, stated Saturday that he expected one of the largest and most enthusiastic concert crowds which has been seen in the auditorium for several years.

Special street car service for after-ing for blocks of seats, from colleges of the state and nearby towns, and with many Atlantans also inquiring about seat reservations, S. Russell Bridges, president of the Southern Music bureau, stated Saturday that he expected one of the largest and most enthusiastic concert crowds which has been seen in the auditorium for several years.

Special street car service for after-the concert has been arranged, so that there will be no difficulty for patrons in getting home, despite the large size of the crowd.

February Is Waffle Month . . . As Well As Valentine Month!

Thus, this opportunity to purchase a Hotpoint Electric Waffle Iron on our characteristic easy terms

There's nothing a man would rather eat . . .

Free! . . . Wesson Oil

Through the courtesy of the Southern Cotton Oil Trading Co., we are able to include with the purchase of each waffle iron this week a full-pint can of Wesson Oil . . . free!

Wesson Oil is admirably suited for use as shortening in the making of waffles on the electric iron. Our Home Service Division has found that it makes a richer, smoother, creamier batter.

CRISP, tender, golden-brown waffles . . . done to an appetizing autumnal tint. Served at the table . . . piping hot, with a friendly, tantalizing aroma that makes every man glad to live—and to be living!

To be truthful, there are several ways to make waffles—on your stove in an old-styled waffle iron placed directly over the flame or, if you have an electric iron, making them in the kitchen and bringing them into the breakfast or dining room.

But the best way of all, to have them most enjoyed, is to cook them right at the table . . . right from an electric waffle iron. Try it. See if they aren't better!

Dixie Corn Meal Waffles

Southerners like their corn-bread. And here's the newest way to serve it . . . Waffle-ized:

1 c corn meal 4 t baking powder
1 t salt 2 c buttermilk
1 t soda 11-2 c flour
6 T Wesson Oil

Beat the eggs until light and fluffy; add the buttermilk. Sift all dry ingredients together and add to liquid. Mix well. Add Wesson Oil last. Bake in Hotpoint Waffle Iron until crisp, about 3 1-2 minutes.

'Electric Waffles'

Activities of the Week in Atlanta Schools

EDITED BY RICHARD CLARK

NEW PUPILS IN FAITH CLASSES

Faith school is welcoming new pupils every day. William Mosley from English Avenue joined his class. Miss McConnell has left our class, but we have her picture on the wall, so that we still have her with us.

Low six is glad to have Ada Nantz from Grant Park with them. Miss Gowan and Miss Roberts are teaching the boys and girls.

The border of great men in high five is making the children want to do great deeds.

Miss Miller seems to be highly appreciated by her new class of low five. Hilton Wall had the best report card last quarter, though. Imogene Cooper, Virginia Houseworth, Louise Smith, Sheila Barnett and Beatrice Hawkins were near him in high records. Mary Odom, a fine speller from Whiteford, has joined high four.

The children of low four are looking forward to Georgia day, for Miss Gimm is getting up a nice program.

The children in high three are shining in arithmetic and spelling. They hope to continue making high grades. Clarence Booser, who was hurt in an accident, is missed very much.

Leroy Mitchell of low three is getting better. We hope he will be able to come back to school soon. Miss Wesley gave us a pretty Georgia flag. Lunnie Parker has come back after a long sickness, in low two. They are glad to see him. Mrs. Ross, one of our mothers, visited us.

Low one has made a pretty winter poster.

Lloyd Clifton, an ungraded low had his tonsils taken out. The children are happy to learn that he is improving.

The children of high kindergarten had a delightful visit to a filling station last week. Now their block has changed into dairies and filling stations.

If our youngest class, low kindergarten, keeps on drinking milk and taking a bath every day, they will all be healthy, wealthy and wise.

CENTER HILL CLASS STUDIES FORESTRY

What with an important health campaign to be carried on, the Center Hill class has been very busy.

An interesting chart of the world war is being made by the seventh grade, under the direction of Mrs. Longino.

Compositions and charts feature the forestry work in the sixth grade. All the upper grades are preparing a program for Abraham Lincoln's birthday, while the primary grades are studying Washington.

Mrs. Vox, the principal of Grove Park school, had 20 of her students take part in a health program in our auditorium on Friday, February 3. The children enjoyed it very much.

Dorothy Parker made the highest average in the seventh grade.

Musical Groups At Joe Brown Give Programs

Joe Brown now has 1,450 pupils. In four and one-half years the school enrollment increased from 600 pupils to one and one-half times that size. This pressure on the school is such that it is necessary that nine classes averaging 40 each be accommodated in the afternoon and six classes in the morning. This means that 15 classes in all are running on double sessions.

Friday, the Girls' Glee club presented "The Persian Princess," an operetta, to a crowded, enthusiastic house at the Joe Brown high school auditorium. The leading characters were Jessie Ramsey, Eunice Jennings, Elsie Peek, Aileen Acee, Martha Allen, Julia Gaudin, Ethel Hancy and Ximena Davis.

The Boy's Glee club, under the direction of Mr. Hankinson, gave a splendid performance at the West End theater on Thursday. Many delightful selections were rendered.

FEBRUARY 18 FINAL ENTRY DATE IN HENRY

Juliette, Ga., February 11.—March 7 has been set by the Henry county democratic executive committee as the date for the primary for the election of county officers.

The committee is now preparing for the final date when a candidate for county officer may enter his name and pay his entrance fees. H. C. Hightower is chairman; J. E. Carson is secretary and treasurer of the executive committee. Miss Bess Fouché, the incumbent, is being opposed for reelection by Walter G. Thompson; Wyatt Rowan, W. A. Simpson and M. H. Hunt have announced for tax commissioner; Mrs. Kate B. Brown, county school superintendent, is being opposed by R. O. Powell; A. G. Harris has announced for reelection as county auditor and has no opposition; L. W. Crumley has announced for treasurer; and C. W. Coon and M. L. Wilson have announced for reelection as commissioners of roads and revenue of district No. 5; David J. Arnold has announced his candidacy for representative to the state legislature from Henry county. Announcements of other candidates are expected later. ## Boys' High Players Score Hit in 'Three Live Ghosts'

Another laurel was added to the crown of the Boys' High Dramatic club Friday evening, February 10, when the players scored an overwhelming success with their production of "Three Live Ghosts," the popular comedy of Frederick S. Isham that proved such a fine play when done by the club in 1925. An appreciative audience greeted the group in their initial appearance of the year at the Atlanta Woman's club, and final reports showed that once more the support of the players by the school and public at large had produced a nice margin in the box office. Carlos Lynes and Walter Paschall scored the most pronounced hits of the evening in their characterizations of "Old Sweeney" and "Spooky," respectively. The entire cast was excellent, and M. H. Davis, who directed the play, deserves highest praise for the manner in which he trained his players.

"The Value of a Technical Education" was the subject on which Boys' High seniors heard a most interesting talk last Wednesday. Had the weather been less inclement, all the school could have heard the speaker, but because of the rain the audience was limited to the capacity of the hall, which is, as doubtless all the Boys' know, the fourth portable.

Mr. Dennison, a graduate of Boston Tech, and a prominent architect in the east, offered several outstanding points to the school. He stated that a technical education is the finest possible basis for future work, in that it teaches to think clearly and logically—to see things in perspective.

He stressed the importance of thoroughly mastering the English language, giving some attention to the need of physics, mathematics and chemistry. He likened the growing boy to a skyscraper, and pointed out that the years in school are the foundation stones.

To any student who is interested in attending a technical institution after finishing Boys' High, especially the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, he offered information which is available through local agencies.

Washing Seminary Seniors Give Benefit Bridge Friday

The senior class of Washington seminary gave a benefit bridge party last Friday afternoon for their charity. Elizabeth Thomas, whom they are sending to Vassar industrial school this year. The party was a great success and the seniors appreciate the fine support the faculty and other friends of the school have given. The party was held at the home of Mrs. Emma Scott, with sides allowing the seniors the use of the seminary parlors, served the most delicious punch for them. Miss Surtees, the class sponsor, furnished several prizes of which the seniors were very proud. Other lovely prizes were donated by such generous people as Rich's shoe department, the Emblem Shop, a piano company, Jacob's Drug company, Bookhammer, the Hatcher, Brookwood Drug company and the Electric Maid Bake shop. Miss Boots Walker gave a beautiful prize of a gold watch. The evening was a perfect dream, and the unlucky people looked upon them all with envy. The committee was a good sport so the committee was rewarded for their labor as the afternoon was a success socially as well as financially.

On Sidney Lanier's birthday a most delightful program, supervised by Miss Nora Belle Starnes, was presented by some of the students. Miss Catherine West read a sketch of Lanier's life; Miss Julie McClellay gave a beautiful reading of the poem "The Marshes of Glynn"; "Life and Love" was read by Miss Mary Anne Haley, and "Barnacles" by Miss Elizabeth Price.

I. N. Ragsdale School To Feature Ga. Day Programs

All week high three has used its history periods for a study of Georgia history and her great men and women, her places of interest and her people's resources. On Monday the founding of Georgia and the principles which led to its settlement will be stressed. James Oglethorpe will be featured.

Miss Louise Bower, teacher of low five, has cleverly woven the celebration of Georgia day into the music, drawing and history work of her class. "Stars of Georgia" was written by Miss Kate Massey and Miss Laura Wood, former principals of the Atlanta public schools, has been used as a base for the readings and stories.

SOUTHGA DEVELOPMENT Improved Farming and Immigration Urged.

Mr. Abbott was accompanied here by Channing Cope, of the utilities information bureau of Atlanta, which has given the association its support for several years. The meeting was presided over by V. L. Collier, of the Georgia Agricultural Experiment Station, and by J. C. Collier, of the Georgia Agricultural Experiment Station.

A class discussion will introduce some of Georgia's notable characters. A class discussion will follow. The final day of the week is devoted to the Georgia booklets kept by the class. Later these finished booklets will be used in our open house.

Jack Mayfield, Eleanor Harris and Mary Elizabeth Smith were selected by low four to introduce them to Oglethorpe, Alexander Stephens and Joel Chandler Harris, "Georgia Land," a class song, closes this program.

The kindergarten will see and touch a Georgia flag, be told the big facts of the founding of Georgia and hear of Oglethorpe—his wonderful character and his love and sympathy for his fellowman.

When the sixth grade has listened to Miss Hurler read the "Song of the Chattahoochee" they will be thankful that Sidney Lanier belongs to Georgia, and that he had the inspiration of the Chattahoochee. Florence West, John Boswell, Paul Downing and Esther Shubert will endeavor to make their class better acquainted with Georgians and Georgia.

Three years ago Junior Red Cross added another activity to its ever growing list—that of collecting old shoes and having them repaired for distribution to needy persons. The shoe shop was established in the Junior Red Cross office, and has since been an ex-service man. This undertaking prospered so rapidly that it was decided to make it a permanent activity and at the same time to bring it into closer contact with the school children. This year this has been accomplished in the Thomson Junior High, where a model shoe shop has been established with an ex-navy man, J. W. Youngblood, as instructor. The boys of the ungraded classes are taught how to repair the shoes and in the evening the school children, members of the Junior Red Cross, contribute to this service of collecting old shoes. These shoes, when repaired, are needed for the agencies operating under the Community Chest. ## A Message From Superintendent Sutton

Dear Boys and Girls:

This is Georgia month! On February 12, on the day on which this letter is published, 1732, General James Oglethorpe landed at Savannah, Ga., and founded the colony of Georgia. From that day until the present, the state has had a most glorious and honorable history.

A people who do not glory in their past will have no future, and so I wish you to study during the month of February the great history of the great Empire state of the south. Learn its geography. Know its principal points of interest and what occurred at these points in the years past. Study its products and think of how you may make these products valuable to your state and to the nation.

I trust that every Georgia girl will at least plan one Georgia Products dinner. And learn to cook it and serve it to her family.

I hope that every boy will study the great achievements of at least one great Georgian, and will know and understand his character and the points that made for his success.

The long line of illustrious men whose names adorn the pages of Georgia history are enough to inspire every boy of the state to great achievements.

Yesterday, February 11, was the birthday of Alexander Hamilton Stevens, a great congressman, senator and governor. He had the honor to be the vice president of the Confederate States of America. During his life he kept his home as an open house for whoever might come by and spend the night or visit in his home. He educated over one hundred boys and started them out in life.

Scores of men like Alexander Stevens have lived within the state and have made it famous.

Neither has Georgia been lacking in great women. A long line commencing with the pioneers and revolutionary character of Nancy Hart and ending with the great women of today, I shall not attempt to name them, but ask that you study and know and understand them.

Then I have one other request of you, when you have studied Georgia geography, history, its products, its great men and women, will you not yourself resolutely determine to make the most of your own life and consecrate it to the service of your wonderful state?

Always your friend,
WILLIS A. SUTTON,
Superintendent of Schools.

On Friday, February 13, our team plays Madison at Moultrie, and whether this game's results make N. A. P. Mr. Webb said.

FARM BILL BATTLE SLATED IN SENATE

Washington, February 11.—(P)—The farm relief battle promises to shift to the senate next week where there are indications that the agriculture committee will take swift and favorable action on the McNary-Haugen bill, the subject of three weeks of hearings before the house committee. A showdown is expected Wednesday.

Advocates of the modified McNary bill, temporarily blocked in the house, insist they have enough votes in committee to report out the measure immediately and force it to early consideration in the senate. As a result the McNary-Haugen forces have suddenly shifted their attack from the house where opponents of the bill, vetoed last session by President Coolidge, have waged stubborn battle.

Personnel of Davison-Paxon Company Enjoys Elaborate Leap Year Cabaret Dinner Dance

'Tuneful Songs' Wins Probation For Detroit Negro

Detroit, February 11.—Recorder's Court Judge Charles L. Bartlett is an enthusiastic musician and patron of the arts, a fact which he believes in some way reached the ears of Charles Blair, a young negro arraigned before him today for a petty theft.

Asked his means of livelihood, Blair replied: "Ah sings and makes up songs as he goes along."

"Compose one now," the judge requested, and the negro sang the following:

"I just can't keep from crying, There ain't no need denying, I wonder what will become of me; I need your sympathy."

The negro was put on probation.

Seattle Council To Curb 'Phone 'Evesdropping'

Seattle, Wash., February 11.—(P)—The indoor sport of listening-in on the party telephone line may become a hazardous occupation if an ordinance drafted by the city attorney today is adopted by the council.

Both "wire tapping" and "wire tapping" would constitute misdemeanors under the proposed ordinance and a fine of $500 and imprisonment of 90 days is provided for conviction. The council is expected to act on the ordinance next week.

It was brought about by complaints of a number of persons that their private telephone lines had been tapped.

Police and prohibition officers would be prohibited from obtaining evidence by wire-tapping under the ordinance.

Above, a group picture of the personnel of the Davison-Paxon company at the elaborate leap year cabaret dinner-dance staged Friday night in the store's tea room. Below, two of the cabaret principals, Ted Miller, master of ceremonies, and Miss Shirley Beauchamp, of the advertising department.

One of the most original and enjoyable occasions of its kind ever held in Atlanta was the leap year cabaret dinner-dance staged Friday night in the sixth floor tea room of the Davison-Paxon company by the personnel of the Peachtree street department store.

Over 300 persons were present including executives of the store, and the tables were grouped about a central dance floor after the fashion of cabarets. With the Billmore orchestra supplying music, ten cabaret numbers were staged by members of the store's personnel and dancing was interspersed following an elaborate dinner. Ted Miller, one of the Davison-Paxon junior executives, acted as master of ceremonies.

In the dancing that enlivened the occasion the leap year idea was carried out by reason of the fact that the usual order was reversed and the women broke on the men. So thoroughly popular did the entertainment prove that the store's personnel plans to hold similar social events periodically, it was announced Saturday.

Wife's Curiosity Over Kin Put Cops on Trail of Mate

Moultrie, Ga., February 11.—(Special).—A deputy sheriff from Colquitt county has gone to Canon City, Colo., to bring to Moultrie a man believed to be Jesse Holland, wanted on a charge of first degree murder in connection with the killing of Brantley Timmons, prominent saw mill man, nearly 14 years ago.

His wife's curiosity concerning his early life, the members of his family and other details, resulted in officers here learning of Holland's whereabouts. The woman Holland married after fleeing from Colquitt county, leaving a murder indictment against him, is said to have written to time urged him to write to "some of your folks."

A few weeks ago, it is said by police, she addressed a letter to W. W. Holland, who lives in a Florida town, explaining that Holland, who is his brother, was his brother-in-law.

In a roundabout way officers here learned of the letter being sent and they again took up the hunt for Holland, who had successfully evaded officers when the crime was fresh, despite the fact that large rewards for his arrest were offered.

A picture of Holland, together with a detailed description of him at the time he fled at the age of 28, was sent to the sheriff at Canon City. The arrest of a man who has lived in Canon City some time under the name of "J. Nathan," Holland's given name, followed. Officers here say they are certain Holland and Nathan are the same man.

Mrs. Timmons is still living and asserts that Holland will be vigorous land, who lives in a Florida town, ly prosecuted when the case is called at the next term of court, which is in April. Most of the witnesses in the case still live in the section of the county where the homicide occurred.

The killing of Timmons by Holland followed a fight between the two men. They had quarreled over a business matter. Meeting on a bridge that spans Lost Creek, about 18 miles west of Moultrie, on a Sunday afternoon in the summer of 1914, Timmons and Holland are said to have agreed to fight it out. In the fight Timmons whipped Holland. The latter is then alleged to have gone to his buggy, got his gun and shot Timmons to death.

Insurance Men To Honor London Visitor in March

Edward C. Stone, of London, an outstanding figure in the insurance field of the world, will be principal speaker at a meeting of the Atlanta Surety association to be held at the Ansley hotel on the night of March 14.

Frank Malony, well-known lawyer, will be toastmaster at the dinner in honor of the distinguished visitor, and the program includes brief addresses by other well-known figures in insurance work.

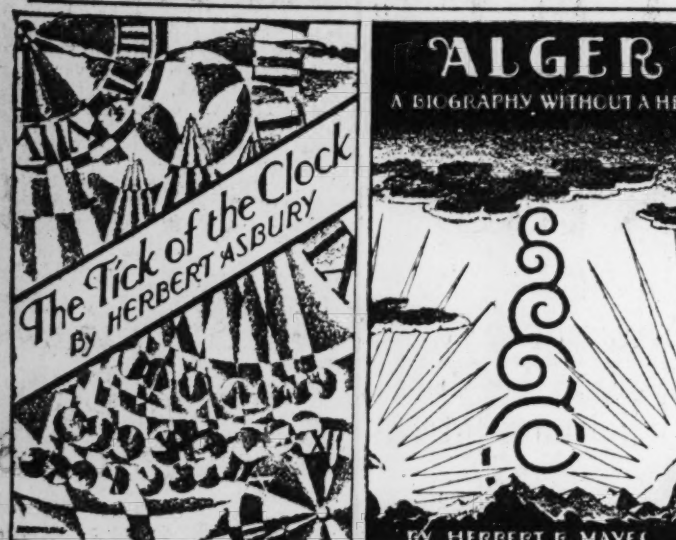

The dinner-meeting will be held in the civic room of the Ansley hotel and plans are being made to care for 200 guests, among them prominent Atlantans and others from points outside the city. Only a tentative program has been arranged, according to Mr. Malony, but all arrangements will be completed by a special committee at an early date, he said.

"Mr. Stone is one of the biggest figures in insurance circles of the world," Mr. Malony said Saturday following receipt of acceptance of the invitation from Mr. Stone. "He is United States manager of the Employers' Liability corporation, Ltd., of London, England, and is president of its affiliated companies," Mr. Malony stated.

Mr. Stone attended Boston university law school and was admitted to the Massachusetts bar in 1900. He is a former member of the legislature of his state and prominent in business and financial circles of the east. He is a senior member of the law firm of Sawyer, Hardy & Stone and is a member of the faculty and lecturer at Boston university.

A NEW IDEA

Four of these new ideas—Macy-Masius jackets—are shown here. "The Tick of the Clock" is a mystery story hanging on the sudden cessation of a clock's ticking. It is printed in magenta and black ink on a bright orange paper. "The Travels of William Bartram" is a historical account of the travels of the famous naturalist, which accounts for the presence of the North American continent in such disarray in the design; it is printed in black and white on a pale green paper. "Alger" is the biography of a man who strove to reach success, but was always a failure, which probably explains the dark clouds; it is printed in lavender and black on buff paper. The jacket for "Show Cases" is drawn by Wilfred Jones; the book is about six people; the design is a red line with black petals, on a very yellow paper.

husband was working hard enough or he would be able to give her more money.

Charlie was offered a better position, but he was not willing to stop at that for she must make better friends, join the clubs, move into a more expensive apartment, buy an automobile, etc., etc.

It was the evening of Bertha's final dinner-party. The telephone was calling. It is the old, old story of envy and foolish pride and then the finale, (D. B. Lippincott company, Philadelphia.)

The Four Post Red. By Charles Fielding Marsh. The author is well known. He has made the Norfolk district of England his own through the interesting stories he has written of its people and its land.

He has built this story around a most interesting group—There is Armine Lockett, a young farmer, and does not want to leave her farm, there's Hetty Talling, young, lovable and dependent, and for whom Armine is chosen from life and he has between Armine and Anne. This is another old, old story. (D. Appleton & Company, New York.)

Rampant Age. By Robert S. Carr. After the story had been read by several this was the result:

"If books and authors could be put into quotations, the result for this volume would be:

"Robert S. Carr is to high school, as Percy Marks and F. Scott Fitzgerald are to college."

The author was born in Washington and he has not yet reached his majority, being only 18 years old. His first story was published when he was only 15. In this story his motive is to give what he knows to be a correct picture of the petty vices, petty jealousies and petty principles of high school life. His characters are chosen from life and he has "painted" a very frank picture of the younger generation as he knows them through actual experience.

What is the truth about the boys and girls of today? Are they jazz-mad? This is a question that is being asked of every one. What do the parents know about them? Has the wilderness of their dances and drinking parties been overdrawn?

"Rampant," the title tells its own story. The author experiences places the responsibility where it belongs. When will indifferent fathers and foolish mothers realize that it is all the cause of their not providing real homes for their sons and daughters. (Doubleday-Doran, Garden City, N. Y.)

The Last Post of three books which with the publication three years ago "Some Do Not"—followed in the next two years by "No More Parades" and "A Man Could Stand Up," by Ford Madox Ford, firmly establishes his position as one of the finest writers in the English language.

This is the last novel of the series—discovers himself to be "the last Tory" in England, and now comes the story of the end of Toryism and of him and his household.

What is the truth about the boys and girls of today? Are they jazz-mad? This is a question that is being asked of every one. What do the parents know about them? Has the wilderness of their dances and drinking parties been overdrawn?

NEW FICTION RECEIVED.

Crooked. By Maximilian Foster. A powerful novel of living puppets, actuated by greed, envy and their like—but some are loyal—herein is romance. Mr. Foster's touch is sardonic, graceful—and his honesty is disconcerting.

This is one of the big subjects that he ever before the reader in the big city. At first the young wife knew that she could not afford to buy the expensive dress which cost more than her husband's salary for half a month. But she could not get away from the idea that "clothes make or ruin the woman." She did not believe her

Golden Clad Cagers Easily Beat Cadets

T. H. S. Basketeers Grab Lead and Hold It Through-

For nearly six minutes they held the cadets, striving vainly to break through the stern defense offered by Tech High. In that time only 3 points were made, those coming via the foul route.

Meantime Tech High was passing the ball in dexterous manner and sinking many long shots. It was clearly demonstrated that Tech High had the better team. The golden clad warriors passed quickly and well. They rang baskets from under the goal and mid-court.

It was the sterling offensive tactics

White would time after time charge furiously down the court, receive a short pass, and leaping high into the air, toss the ball in for points. He made 12 points, for honors of the evening, in this manner, before he was evicted from the game via the personal foul route. The game was played in such speedy fashion that

Phillips and Lester were outstanding for G. M. A., fighting continually in an attempt to pierce Tech High's defense. Phillips played a wonderful

The game was the climax of the tournament, which started yesterday, and the Smithies demonstrated throughout that they are worthy of inscribing after their names that of city prep basketball champion for 1928.

Playing well from the opening whistle, the G. M. A. five jumped into an early lead and not once during the entire game was this lead ever overcome. While the defense of the Cadets was good there were many occasions during the contest when the Blue Birds missed very easy shots under the basket.

The passing and all around floor work of the Cadets was of a much higher order than that of the U. S. B. team, however, and there was little question as to which was the better team Saturday afternoon.

Worley Stars.

The goal shooting of Worley, who found the hoop for no less than a dozen points, was the offensive feature of the G. M. A. team, while the floor work and all around good playing of Lester and Smith deserve mention. Freeman, with 13 points, led the attack for U. S. B. McMan-

Although doped to win by a wide margin after its sensational showing in the preliminary test against East Point Friday night, Tech High found the Commercial High five a hard proposition. Although the game was decided by a wide margin the score rather does not indicate the tough struggle that took place.

This brilliant player accounted for no less than 14 points during his sojourn in the game. Stearns, who suffered an injury to his ankle during the encounter and who was forced to retire, also deserves much credit for the victory, his guarding and floor work being especially good. Hargrove with six points led the Commercial High team in scoring.

RADIO-ING

The Air Waves.

BY WILL SMITH.

The Dial Twister has been asked to include in this column from time to time suggestions which might prove aids to you radio listeners. We will be glad to be of any assistance, and to this end would like to have you folks send us ideas which you have found to aid your reception.

Here's an idea which has proved of exceptional help to several real old-time radio fans. It concerns your ground, the ground itself, the ground connections and the proper attention to the ground.

Your ground is, you know, of utmost importance. To those who have been lax about grounds, take this to heart. Your selectivity, your volume, your clear quality of reception, your distance depends to a great extent on your ground.

Holds World Records.
The radio fan who holds what is confidently believed to be all-world records for number of stations logged, verifications of reception, the most countries logged and the greatest distance ever consistently brought in has evolved a ground "system." And his "system" (it is nothing less) is to us unique, but easily and inexpensively installed. He gets Central and South America, the Hawaiian Islands, Asia, Europe, and all states and countries in North America. He can bring in 210, London, at a turn of the dial—and he gets distance in the daytime all with a two-tube receiver, and with loud speaker volume.

This fan, who lives near the Atlantic seaboard, has sunk twelve lengths of iron pipe (galvanized, we expect) in the ground about two feet apart. They are in a row, and about ten feet deep. To these pipes he has attached short leads, clamped to cleaned sections of the pipes. These leads go to a single lead which is attached to the ground post on the set. Therefore he has twelve grounds, all of the best possible type, instead of one ground.

To keep the ground about his pipes moist, this fan has buried in his "system" a leaky automobile radiator, with just the neck above the surface of the ground. This he fills with water, which leaks about his pipes, giving him an absolute "ground" for all of his 12 pipes.

Watch Connections.
Now for you who want to be efficient, listen to his routine. He cleans his ground clamps on after cleaning his connections with emery cloth. He changes his ground clamps about every three months, or when the least corrosion appears. He keeps his leads to his set short and in the best possible repair. His results have amazed radio engineers.

We consider his efforts well worth the time he spends. Wouldn't you? While we don't expect all of you to equal his reception record, it is an assured fact that, should you duplicate his "system," you, too, will be startled with your improved results. His home is ideally located, we will admit, away from the city and other receiving sets and on a high piece of ground. But don't let that deter you. Your ground is of utmost importance.

His Aerial Plan.
As for this 17-year-old fan's aerial, he has it pointing north-northeast and the lead is taken off the south end. It is about 130 feet long. (This length is necessary because of the two-tube set he uses. You probably could very well use a shorter aerial.) And he keeps his bare copper aerial wire, not nicked, clean. When corrosion appears, he puts up a new one.

The ground "system" is the main point. The Dial Twister would like to hear from Atlanta and Georgia radio fans who will try this ground idea. We know you will fall hard for it, and we want to know your results. Getting 210 and 100K, Japan, should be more than worth it.

And should any of you know of any little, inexpensive quirk which have improved your reception, let the Dial Twister know. We will pass them on to our readers.

Steam radiators and gas pipes are not good grounds, not even fair. Cold water pipes, especially if attached ahead of the meter, are much better. But still more efficient, and most selective, are pipes driven into the ground and that ground be kept moist. The connections should be as bright and clean as it is humanly possible to make.

Among the best programs listeners may expect is the Stromberg-Carlson Tuesday night over KDKA and other blue chain stations. The time will be 7 o'clock. This hour has won a great following and programs during the last three weeks have been well up to the high standard set by the director.

The A. & P. Gypsies will be heard at 7:30 o'clock over WWJ, WSAI or WGN Monday night. The Gypsies will be presented in an Indiana program. We thoroughly appreciate the Gypsies' music.

The Anglo Persians will be heard in Oriental music (and what we mean!) over WWJ or WGY, either should be good, at 8 o'clock Friday night. Should you care particularly for Oriental don't pass this up.

Capt Kidd in another inimitable novelty program will be broadcast at 9:30 o'clock Friday night over the Columbia chain. Try to get your best reception from KMOX, unless you have a favorite which better pleases you. The hardy old buccaner will entertain, that is certain.

The Goodrich Zippers will tear around like young tornadoes at 8:30 o'clock Wednesday night. Also Wednesday night seems to offer as good or better programs than any other one night in the week. The Columbia phonograph hour is on at 9 o'clock over the Columbia chain. The Inge Troubadours are giving their ballads at 8 o'clock over the red chain. Then there are others which merit a trial, also. The Goodrich and Inge hours are both coming to us over WSB, while KMOX will bring in the Columbia period.

Then there will be auction bridge, dance orchestras, chain features and many other hours, half hours and independent programs. You all have your favorites. We have only named some few which we particularly like.

As we close, the Dial Twister wants to add that we are getting more music every night than we know what to do with, what with a Stromberg-Carlson "Treasure Chest" receiver and an S-T. loud speaker.

Among the good programs to be broadcast during the week to come, the Dial Twister would like to call your attention to a few which we expect will be exceptionally worthy.

ON ROEBUCK HOUR

Harry Pomar, famous Atlanta violinist, announced today that his production "Variety Revue" will be presented under his direction during the Sears-Roebuck Agricultural Foundation broadcast over WSB Wednesday night between 7 and 8 o'clock. The production was postponed last Wednesday night in order that Max Rosen, one of the world's great violinists, and his accompanist, Isiah Seligman, might appear on the Sears-Roebuck program during their visit in Atlanta.

According to announcements by the foundation the "Variety Revue" promises to be one of the outstanding features of the season. A reproduction of all theatrical acts of Broadway, including an overture, blackface comedians, prima donna, close dance, let and male quartet will be given over radio by Mrs. Esther Billingsley, soprano; Paul and John, "The Two Disciples of Harmony"; the Foundation Four quartet, and the Sears-Roebuck instrumentalist directed by William Cresswell.

Starting at 6:30 o'clock Paul and John and the instrumentalist will broadcast a 20-minute dinner concert under the auspices of the agricultural foundation.

Friday morning during the 10 o'clock homecoming program the Parent-Teacher association will broadcast a program. Each of the other mornings of the week Mrs. R. F. Wheeler, home advisor, will talk to the homecoming of the southeast.

Dinner hour programs will take the air Monday, Wednesday and Friday between 11:30 and 12:30 o'clock, central time. The artists to be heard on the noon broadcasts are Paul and John, Bob Farley, harpist; Dower Burnett, harmonica and banjo; Long Sisters, Lawrence Smith, tenor; Eugene Boehm, violinist; the Sears-Roebuck players directed by Harry Pomar; Frank W. Radio Allocations
Unfair to South,
Says Tennessean

Washington, February 11.—(AP)—Discrimination against the south in the allocation of licenses to high-powered broadcasting stations was charged today in the house merchant marine committee by Representative Davis, democrat, Tennessee, a member of the committee.

Mr. Davis, enumerating the population figures for the New York and Pennsylvania radio zones, declared that the south had a greater population than either, but was allotted a much smaller amount of power to cover a vast area.

The Tennessean made his charge at the conclusion of the testimony of Judson M. Grinnett, Shreveport, La., attorney who related to the committee the fight that W. K. Henderson, a manufacturer of the same city, had made to secure more power for his station, KWKH.

The two Shreveport men testified that the station had been forced to divide its time with another station in spite of their contentions and that they had not been allowed redress in the courts.

Mr. Grinnett urged that during its consideration of the White bill which would give the federal radio commission another year of life, a provision be made in the measure which would give stations the right of appeal to the federal district courts from decisions of the commission involving changes in radio licenses.

He also urged that the court of appeals of the District of Columbia be compelled to review the facts as brought by the law in the radio cases brought before it.

Rockefeller on Air.

John D. Rockefeller, Jr., will be the guest speaker during the Collier's radio hour this evening at 7:15 o'clock.

Collier's radio hour will be heard through WJZ, New York; WRZ, Springfield; WBA, Boston; KDKA, Pittsburgh; WLV, Cincinnati; WJL, Detroit; KWK, Chicago; KWK, St. Louis; WREN, Lawrence, Kan.; WCCO, Minneapolis-St. Paul.

GENERAL MOTORS
BRINGS SOPRANO

Rosa Raisa, prima donna of the Chicago Opera company, who will be the guest soloist in the Cadillac hour of the General Motors family party on Monday evening, February 13, brings to the radio audience one of the superbly artistic hits of her repertoire, the Russian masterpiece, a glorious, dramatic soprano voice.

Today she is one of the foremost sopranos of the concert and opera stage and occupies a distinctive position in the field of modern, genuine singers because of her type—that of a soprano of the old "grand style," like Nordica and Patti. But two decades of work and struggle lie behind her.

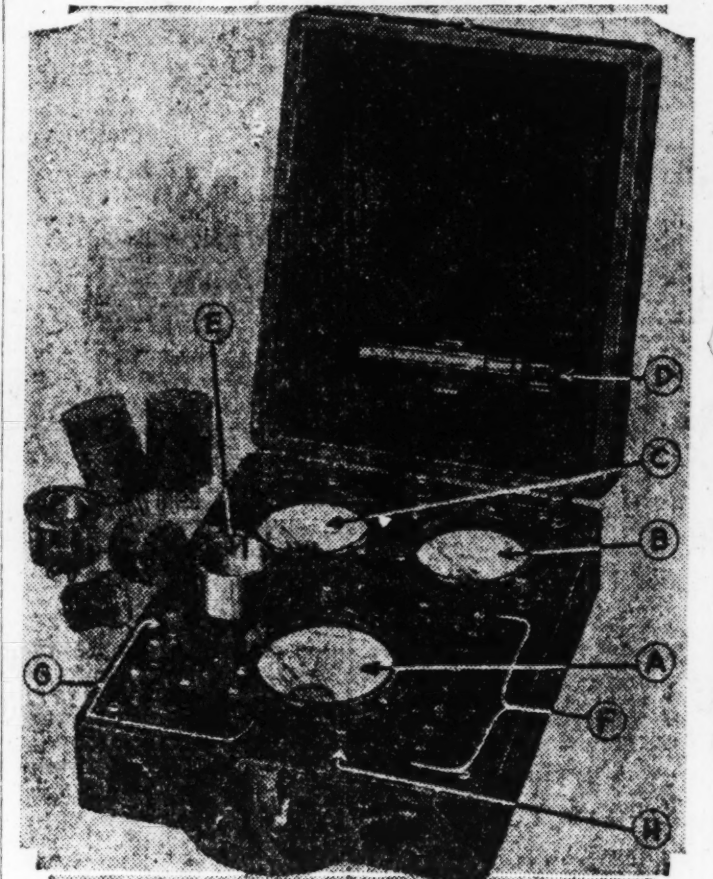

The Cadillac hour next Monday night will have only two parts instead of three, as heretofore. The first part will include a symphony orchestra with Rodolfo Graman as conductor, and Madame Raisa, as soloist. The second part will feature a concert band under the leadership of Patrick Conway, with Madame Raisa in one group of two numbers.

The entire program will be devoted to popular classics, ballads and light opera numbers, and will be broadcast over 20 stations from the studios of the National Broadcasting company. It follows:

Part I.
Intermezzo from "Cavalleria Rusticana" (Mascagni)—Orchestra.
Ritorno violin from "Aida" (Verdi)—Miss Raisa.
"Chorus of the Flutes" Tchaikovsky—Orchestra.
Vocal solo from "Cavalleria Rusticana" (Mascagni)—"April Weather" (Rogers)—Miss Raisa.
"Scarf Dance" (Chamond)—"Pizzicato Polka" (Beliz)—Orchestra.
"Ave Maria" (Schubert)—"Keys of Heaven" (Dunhill)—Miss Raisa.

Part II.
Overture from "Zampa" (Harcourt)—"Pavane" (Whistling)—"Bacchi"—Raisa.
"O, Come the Singing Madmen" (Brahms)—"Plaisir d'Amour" (Maurice)—Miss Raisa.
"Hummer March of a Marinetto" (Gounod)—"Chimes of Normandy" (Ligeti)—Raisa.

Station WJAX, Jacksonville, Fla., reports that it has received letters acknowledging reception from every station except four. These are New Mexico, North Dakota, Washington and Wyoming.

New Test Kit Proves Aid
In Better Set Servicing

The instrument above, known as the Jewell No. 137 radio set analyzer, is practically a portable radio laboratory in its most convenient form. It consists of three meters covering A.C. voltages of 0-3, 0-15 and 0-150; D.C. voltages of 0-10, 0-50, 0-100 and 0-500 on a 1,000-ohm per volt meter; and D.C. milliamperes readings of 0-10 and 0-100. Accompanying article describes it in detail.

BY L. O. MOSTELLER.
Service has become a predominant factor in every branch of modern industry. The success of any product and its acceptance by the public is in direct proportion to the degree of service that is rendered in conjunction with it.

It is much simpler and more gratifying to both the merchant and the customer to correct any trouble that may arise in a radio installation than to try to persuade the customer that black is white.

There are four places in the set itself, the accessories, the tubes, or the installation, such as the antenna and ground.

It has been said by many engineers that the tubes are not an necessary to the set, but rather is the set necessary to the tubes. The function of a receiver is merely as a coupling and selecting device to pass the correct frequencies and amount of current from one tube to another so as to enable them to perform their function of amplification or rectification.

The power units supply the necessary energy to the elements of the tubes so they will operate properly, and the antenna and ground or loop antenna accumulates the energy from the various broadcasting stations to be brought to the set for selection and amplification.

It can be seen, therefore, that the proper place from which to check a radio set is the tube sockets, as at this point every source of power is necessary to the tubes. The function of a receiver is merely as a coupling and selecting device to pass the correct frequencies and amount of current from one tube to another so as to enable them to perform their function of amplification or rectification.

The function of a receiver is merely as a coupling and selecting device to pass the correct frequencies and amount of current from one tube to another so as to enable them to perform their function of amplification or rectification.

Deciphering this ascertains that the power units are functioning satisfactorily or otherwise, and also that the current arrives at its destination and is of the correct value at that point.

It will also check the efficiency of the set in showing the output in milliamperes, both with and without a grid bias by pushing button "H," and in so doing will prove that every circuit in the set is complete, or detect any open circuits.

Meter "A" gives D.C. voltage readings of 0-500, 0-100, 0-50 and 0-10 volts; also milliamperes readings of 0-10 and 0-100. This will test the output of any "B" eliminator, "A" eliminator, power pack or amplifier and test any type tube, including the largest power tubes, such as the 210 type. It will also give the exact voltage of each tube in the set.

Meter "B" is a double reading alternating current meter with a range of 0-3 and 0-15 volts. This will test the A.C. filament voltage on any of the new A.C. tubes for which a special adapter is furnished so that they also can be tested in this unit.

Meter "C" is an 0-150 volt A.C. meter for testing the output at the receptacle. It is surprising how often the source of trouble in A.C. sets can be traced to variations in line voltage, a variation which, if not compensated, will greatly impair their efficiency.

EVEREADY PLANS
EXCELLENT HOUR

A program of "story songs," with Vernon Dalhart and Carson Robison occupying the center stage as singers, composers and performers on the guitar, harmonica and jews-harp, will be broadcast by the Eveready hour this Tuesday evening over WEPF and associated N. R. C. stations, beginning at 8 o'clock, central standard time.

Vernon Dalhart, when he joined forces with Carson Robison, was already noted for his vocal renditions of American folk songs. Robison brought to the union a writer talent for the musical and lyrical composition of songs whose themes portrayed in light mood the lonely narrative of the American scene. Together, they have become famed for their singing on both the quaint melodies from Robison's pen, and also on the "story songs" handed down by the pioneer inhabitants of the mountains and valleys of the south and west.

A dash of the dulcimer, a snistering of guitar, a hero, a heroine, and an engine wreck, and you have the typical Dalhart-Robison railroad roundelay, guaranteed to be crooned, hummed and whistled in every corner of the country a fortnight after launching.

Better known as the Kansas Jay Bird, Robison, besides being a composer, singer and musical artist, is also a remarkable whistler. In that popular, but seldom-mastered art, he has few peers.

Among the numbers which Dalhart and Robison will sing will be the following: "Nellie Dare and Charles Brooks," "The Jealous Love of Lone George," "Valley," "Billy Richardson's Last Ride," "Lay Down, Doggies," "The Chain Gang Song" and "The Governor's Pardon."

To provide the proper setting the Eveready Hour management under the direction of George Furgerson, arranged for an unusual group of dialogues which will serve as an introduction to Dalhart and Robison at the beginning of each of the foregoing numbers.

Adeline Hood, violinist, will be featured in the "story song" duet.

The Eveready orchestra, with Nathaniel Shilkret as conductor, will play.

Handsomeness Males Condemned
By Show Girls in 'Love Test'

New York, February 11.—(United Press)—A brunette's conception of the "ideal man" is one who is faithful, intelligent, and possesses a sense of humor, is anywhere from 27 to 45, is appreciative and of the "southern gentleman" type—and she doesn't care whether he has any money if he really loves her.

In the eyes of a blonde, he is above all intelligent and possesses a sense of humor, is anywhere from 27 to 45, is appreciative and of the "southern gentleman" type—and she doesn't care whether he has any money if he really loves her.

Combine all these masculine virtues and three others—attentiveness, politeness and an athletic physique—and you have a man who is equally fascinating to blonde or brunette, a reconstruction of Don Juan or Apollo Belvedere.

Such are the verdicts of the six show girls, who, as representatives of the sophisticated modern girl, were chosen as subjects for scientific "love tests" conducted recently by Dr. William Marston, professor of psychology at the Columbia university.

Dr. Marston's six subjects—three blondes and three brunettes—described in an interview, the masculine types to which they are capable of greatest response, and revealed some of their idiosyncrasies on the subject of love. Handsomeness was unanimously condemned.

"The average modern girl has discovered that they are far too conceited to be interested," said Jean Ardor, a petite blonde of 19. "She prefers those who are just looking at her, and who are 15 years old."

John Ackerman, 21, a brunette. The other two brunettes felt the same way.

"If I am in love with a man," said Miss Ackerman, "I've got to have him with me every minute. The instant he gets out of my sight I begin to suspect another woman."

Sticks, Knives and Bolts
AUSTRIAN DOCTORS PRONOUNCE EXHIBITION GENUINE
In Body But Feels No Pain

Vienna, February 11.—(AP)—Hundreds of physicians gathered today at headquarters of the Austrian Society for Psychic Research and watched in amazement as Paul Diebel, 30-year-old Silesian miner, had daggers, nails and knives thrust into his body without causing indication of pain or producing a flow of blood.

The spectators included many women, some of whom leaned forward with opera glasses to catch a better view of the quivering, pierced man. Others fainted at the sight. This was the first time a group of qualified scientific men had witnessed his astounding exhibition. They pronounced it genuine, with no show of pain and permitted physicians to examine the bloodless wounds produced.

Diebel concluded his exhibition by allowing one of the spectators to shoot a large metal bolt into his chest by means of a catapult. He then calmly withdrew the missile with no show of pain and permitted physicians to examine the bloodless wound produced.

Brothers Parted 31 Years Ago
LAST SAW EACH OTHER IN 1897
In Georgia Are Reunited

Jacksonville, Fla., February 11.—(AP)—Separated 31 years ago, when they were youngsters in Arkansas, having been heard from since, and it is believed they are the same, two brothers, Noah E. McGinnis, 37, of Jacksonville, and S. T. McGinnis, 46, of Parkin, Ark., were reunited after each had thought the other dead for several years.

Back in the spring of 1867 the two brothers and a sister left their old home in Calhoun, Ga., with their father for Arkansas, where they established a home. Noah, the youngest, then was 6 years old. Longing for his old home and a more familiar climate, the father brought Noah to Jacksonville, after the death of the daughter, leaving the other son in Arkansas with "the people" in a little Arkansas town, where the boy later secured employment for $5 a month and board.

Meanwhile the older brother grew into manhood and became a locomotive engineer. While on his run in Arkansas he heard of relatives still living in the old home town in Georgia. Through them he learned that his brother still was living and owned a home in Jacksonville. Communication was established between the two, and the rest was easy. Each brother had been reported dead to the other years ago.

THE wealth of cultural, educational, inspirational material which radio programs of today are pouring into the air makes a Stromberg-Carlson more than ever desirable.

For unless you hear every note and instrument of a New York Symphony Orchestra, it might as well be a small town band. Unless the voice of a McCormack comes to you with every tone intact, it might as well not come at all.

A Stromberg-Carlson gives you realistic tone over the entire musical scale. That is why people of musical understanding select Stromberg-Carlson. Lesser instruments will not do because they miss too much—and there is too much that must not be missed.

Wilkins To Renew Search FOR NEW LAND IN ARCTIC

Seattle, Wash., February 11.—(AP)—The great hunt for new lands, new seas and down the earth, a search for new countries, today gave impetus to another strenuous mission when Captain George H. Wilkins, American explorer, and Carl E. Eklund, his soundproof pilot, sailed from here for Seward, Alaska, from whence they will begin a search for an arctic continent.

They will go from Seward to Fairbanks by rail. From Fairbanks they will attempt to fly to Point Barrow, a point beyond the great adventure will begin, for up to that time the territory is not new to Wilkins, who twice before has tried to fly over the arctic "fabled spot," only to be turned back, barred by the ice and darkness.

Captain Wilkins plans to fly from Point Barrow to Suez. The purpose of the flight is to discover a continent which he believes lies in the arctic wastes unknown to man and to make a meteorological observation which he hopes will increase the knowledge of climatic conditions and their causes.

Every new Stromberg-Carlson has hands' pack in foliage playing phonograph records.

NEW PIERCE-ARROW PLEASES PARISIAN

A letter received from J. Sautechik, famed Parisian body builder, regarding his impression of the new Pierce-Arrow series 81 which he inspected on his recent trip to America, has just been made public by Myron E. Forbes, president of the Pierce-Arrow Motor Car company.

Portions of the letter are especially interesting, because in them the European expert compares the new Pierce-Arrow with the fine products of automobile manufacturers on the continent.

He says, speaking of the series 81: "It was evident to me that this new type is a particular success from the double point of view of elegance as well as comfort, and I am certain that it will be enthusiastically received by connoisseurs. It is worthy in every point of view of the European bodies and it is my opinion that it will have a profound influence on body conceptions in America. It is the most beautiful car of its kind that I have ever seen."

Regarding Pierce-Arrow manufacturing methods, he has this to say: "It is unnecessary to add that what I saw of your methods of manufacture convinced me that the Pierce-Arrow is worthy of its world renown, and merits its place at the head of American body builders."

Monsieur Sautechik's words of commendation carry especial weight because the Parisian carrossier is widely known throughout Europe for his creations. The bodies built in the Sautechik plant are used almost exclusively by Hispano-Suiza, Isotta Fraschini, Mercedes and Minerva.

He has built special bodies for the nation, the king of Norway, the king of Spain and other notables of Europe and America.

STUDEBAKER SMASHES JANUARY RECORDS

South Bend, Ind., February 11.—(Special.)—Actual retail deliveries of Studebaker and Erskine cars during January were the largest in Studebaker history, and 58 per cent greater than for January, 1927, according to a statement issued today by A. H. Erskine, president of the Studebaker corporation.

The figures are based on retail deliveries to customers as reported by Studebaker dealers throughout the country every ten days. Deliveries for the first two 10-day periods of the month showed an increase of 51 per cent over the same period last year. The last 10-day period registered an increase of 70 per cent over the corresponding period of 1927, thereby indicating a steady upward trend in Studebaker business. That the January gain in sales is nationwide is indicated by the fact that 22 out of 23 Studebaker branch territories in the United States contributed to the increase.

According to Studebaker, the sales increases are due to the introduction of the new President eight and the new American edition of the Erskine six, and to spectacular feats of performance scored by the Commander and Dictator models toward the close of 1927. As a result of more than 50 official records won by the products of this concern, Studebaker now holds all the highest endurance and speed records for fully equipped stock cars, regardless of power or price.

Least, a using tires large enough for the heaviest load placed on them at any time and keeping them inflated to the correct pressure. "Nearly every day some one will say to us 'Why do some people get 25,000 miles from their tires when the best I ever get is around 10,000 miles? How do you account for that?' 'The trouble is not with the tires, but with the way they are overloaded or underinflated. Nothing—man, beast or mechanical device—can stand up under great abuse. The remedy is to provide tires large enough for the maximum load that may be placed on them and to keep them properly inflated. Reasonable care and regular inspection of tires for minor injuries and checking of the air pressure will enable the motorist to get the most in mileage and useful service."

Franklin Had Important Influence of Air-Cooling

The Franklin Automobile company's work in developing and popularizing air-cooling for motor cars has had a tremendous influence in perfecting the air-cooled aviation engine and has made possible the recent historical flights, according to Lieutenant Arthur C. Goebel, who won the Dole prize by flying the 2,497 miles from San Francisco to Honolulu in a ship with a single Wright "Whirlwind" air-cooled engine.

The Franklin Airman engine is the only air-cooled automobile motor used extensively today and the full benefit of accumulating experimental data and popularizing this type of power plant has rested upon the Franklin company for more than a quarter of a century. Aviation nearly stood still until it adopted air-cooled engines, leaping forward with surprising impetus after the Wright Aeronautical corporation developed their fixed radial type of air-cooled engine known as the "Whirlwind," which encouraged other makers to embark upon a similar enterprise.

Many changes from the conventional Franklin design have been made by the builders of aircraft engines, but the fundamental principles remain the same. The more recent trend is toward the engine with cylinders in line, which will no doubt become more closely identified with the Franklin Airman motor than is the present radial power plant. As a matter of fact the German Junkers air-cooled engine and the French Michel have already incorporated the Franklin system of pressure cooling on engines of six cylinders in line.

This firm member has been with the Southern railway 21 years. Mr. Cochran formerly was president of the Eveready Storage Battery company, with which he was affiliated eight years. ## Nash Company Announces Reduction in Its Prices

Announcement was made Saturday by C. W. Nash, president of the Nash Motors company, of reduced prices, effective February 1, ranging through standard six, special six and advanced six series. These reductions follow hard on the heels of heavy sales at the opening motor shows of the year where the Nash display, with its emphasis on style and new color harmonies, is attracting great attention. The new standard six prices, all f. o. b. Racine, follow: four-door sedan, $925; touring, $865; cabriolet, $925; two-door sedan, $845; coupe, $845; de luxe sedan, $995. The new price on the advanced six 5-passenger 4-door sedan is $1,495, and the price on the 5-passenger 4-door special six sedan is $1,295.

Nash officials point to this move as the aggressive forerunner of big Nash expansion in sales throughout the country, with Nash in 1928 "assuming even more pronounced leadership in its field than ever before." In speaking of this price reduction, C. W. Nash said: "Since the New York automobile show I have been traveling the country attending other shows and dealer meetings and everywhere I find encouraging evidence of healthy business. All that I have been quoted as saying about the prosperous general condition of the country, has been confirmed in the course of these trips.

"Our own sales are proceeding with gratifying force and in view of the fact that our new prices now make the current Nash line the greatest values we have ever offered, I look for even bigger business."

"All 7 of our family voted New Hupmobile first in secret ballot"

Oklahoma banker tells how his household selected the Six of the Century

Popular suffrage has already cast an emphatic vote in favor of the New Hupmobile—The Six of the Century. An actual incident in Oklahoma serves to illustrate the universal agreement.

"Our family of seven went shopping for a new car," reports a prominent banker of that state. "We inspected all the well known makes before attempting a decision. That evening we decided to take a secret ballot on first, second and third choice. When the votes were counted the Hupmobile had received 7 for first choice—a unanimous decision."

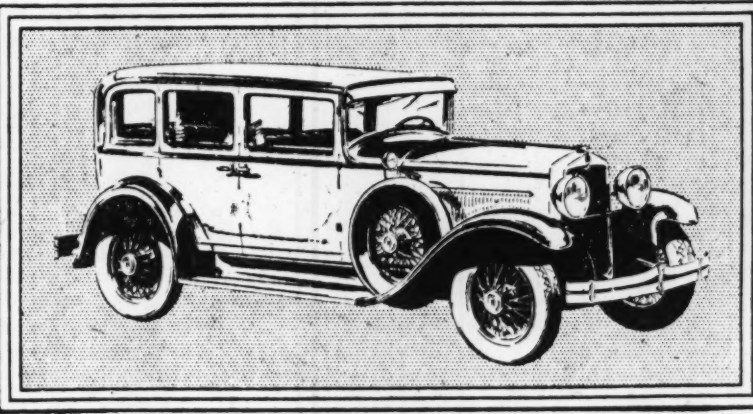

When a new car makes such an impression it is no wonder that people stand in line to buy, offer premiums for immediate delivery and do other strange things that have not happened since the automobile was a baby and the century had just been born.

As a matter of recorded fact, this creation of new beauty and advanced mechanical excellence has so startled and delighted the motor world that it has been aptly christened the Six of the Century.

You'll find it a deceiving car as well as a beautiful car; for you will assume, as soon as you see it, that it is well above the $2000 price. But it is well below and that is one of its pleasantest surprises.

The camel train is being replaced by the motor truck and passenger bus. The road from Peshawar City to Kabul in Afghanistan is frequented by motor-driven vehicles. LAUDS PROGRESS OF STUDEBAKER

"There is no concern in the automotive industry that has taken a more forward-looking attitude with respect to its engineering and research departments than the Studebaker corporation of America within the past two years."

This was the statement made here today by J. E. Yarbrough, president of the Yarbrough Motor company, local Studebaker-Erskine distributor.

"In the past two years," said Mr. Yarbrough, "Studebaker has greatly augmented and strengthened both the personnel and facilities of its engineering department. In 1925 a new 800-acre proving ground, involving an investment of $1,000,000, was inaugurated. In 1926 H. S. Vance was made vice president in charge of production. Mr. Vance has been connected with Studebaker in various capacities since 1910, when he began as an apprentice in the Studebaker factories. He worked successively as head of the specification department, purchasing agent, assistant to the president, foreign sales manager and finally general sales manager."

"Following Mr. Vance's appointment the personnel of the engineering department and all laboratory facilities were moved from Detroit to South Bend so that all executive groups of the corporation would be centered at one point. New quarters were built for the engineering staff and complete, modern research laboratories were created to give the engineering personnel the advantage of the most advanced equipment."

"New personnel was also brought into the department until today Studebaker's engineering staff comprises 575 individuals. Heading the department is Chief Engineer D. G. Roos, formerly of Marmon, Pierce-Arrow and Locomobile. W. S. James, former section chief of the United States bureau of Standards, Washington, D. C., is in charge of research. Messrs. Roos and James are ably assisted by men of long experience, such as Dr. E. C. Newcomb, Stanwood W. Sparrow, Karl Herrmann, K. M. Wise, Leon A. Chaminade, John Warner, Charles Link and J. R. Hughes."

"That the Studebaker engineering staff has been actively engaged in supporting the Studebaker policy of constantly improving its cars is attested by the brilliant performance exhibited by Studebaker and Erskine cars in 1927. Foremost among the Studebaker models which have added new luster to the Studebaker name is the Commander, the car which recently traveled 25,000 miles in less than 23,000 minutes at the Atlantic City speedway. This car established 50 endurance and speed records during 1927—all under the sanction and supervision of the contest board of the American Automobile association. The Dictator also established a record for cars selling under $1,400 when it traveled 24 consecutive hours at an average speed of 61.797 miles per hour. The new American edition of the Erskine Six traveled 24 consecutive hours at 64.1 miles per hour. This established a new record for stock cars selling under $1,000."

"Nor have the achievements of the Studebaker engineering department been confined to bringing about a high degree of speed and endurance in its products. Many practical features have been developed in the design of Studebaker cars through the genius of the engineering department, such as a magazine lubricating system which reduces the necessity of lubrication to 2,500-mile intervals. Studebaker also announced recently that due to advanced engineering and to precision manufacture, and to special dynamometer tests given to motors any Studebaker or Erskine car could be driven 40 miles per hour the day it is delivered. These are practical features which register an appeal with every motor car purchaser."

"Chromium plating has also been adopted for all exterior bright plated parts on all Studebaker models including radiator, headlamps, cow lamps and bumpers."

AUGUSTA HAS NEW FRANKLIN DISTRIBUTOR

Announcement is made by S. B. Dodge, state distributor for the Franklin automobiles, that the Augusta Franklin company has been organized and named dealers for the car at Augusta. The new organization is headed by George H. Dennis as president, William E. Noel, Jr., secretary and treasurer, while A. L. Smith is general manager of the concern.

The new Augusta agency of the Franklin Airman series is highly pleased with the prospects and Mr. Smith, who is the manager of the new company, is an old Franklin man, having been in charge of the service station at Augusta for a decade and he has also been actively identified with the sales department. According to the statement of the management the outlook for the Franklin in Augusta and throughout the Augusta district is exceptionally bright, with many sales in prospect and several deliveries of the new series have already been effected.

The Franklin automobile has long been popular in Augusta and vicinity and there is reported to be an exceptionally large list of owners in that city and section. The winter visitors, including hundreds who come to Augusta and a large number in Aiken, just 16 miles away, own and operate Franklin cars. The Augusta service station rendering service to about 500 cars.

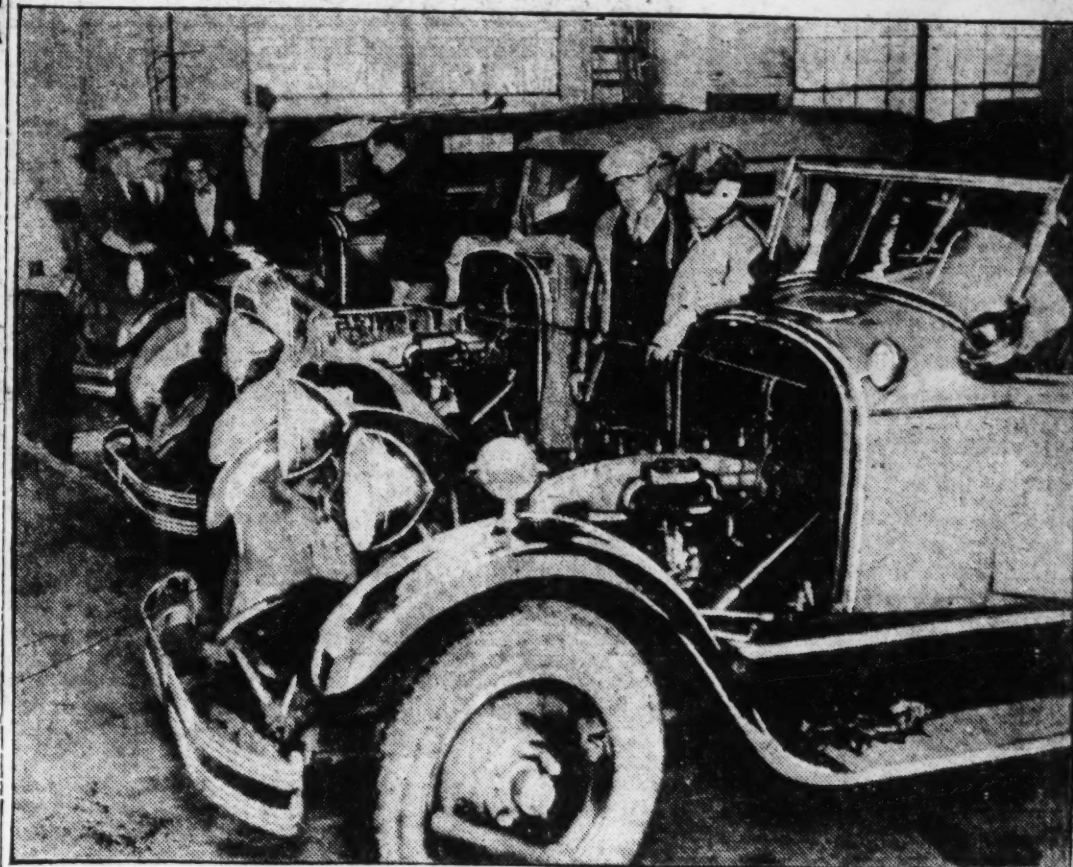

A. L. Smith, manager of the Augusta company, announces that larger quarters and increased space, both for exhibition purposes and for service station work, is in contemplation by the concern and that arrangements to this effect will be made during the next two or three weeks. In the meantime the company is carrying on at full speed and supplying all service requirements in the most up-to-date manner and filling orders for new cars as rapidly as obtainable.

MAN IS "EXECUTED," SURVIVES ORDEAL.
EXECUTED AGAIN

Mexico City, February 11.—(AP)—Ernesto Villareal, Agarian leader of the town of Atlatalhuca, state of Morelos, was executed, given the coup de grace and allowed to tell the tale. Learning of the failure of the first execution soldiers dragged him from the hospital and executed him a second time.

After being given the coup de grace following the first execution, Villareal crawled for several miles under a scorching sun to Oaxaca. There he related his hair-raising experience and exhibited a bullet hole in his chest and a nasty gash in his forehead. The story of Villareal's adventure was duly printed by the press and disclosed his whereabouts to the soldiers. They broke into the hospital, marched Villareal out of town and executed him again.

WHEN BETTER AUTOMOBILES ARE BUILT, BUICK WILL BUILD THEM

BRILLIANTLY Different

Dodge Brothers Victory Six is not only a new car but an entirely new and better kind of a car.

For the first time in history, body and chassis are a single, integral unit.

The wide, deep Victory chassis frame, flush with the body lines, eliminates the body sill and the customary body OVERHANG.

Major body parts are reduced from 367 to 8! 175 pounds of useless weight are cast off!

The gravity center is radically lowered—with head-room and road clearance unaffected.

And battleship construction (i. e., double steel walls) is applied for the first time to the construction of a motor car body.

The results can not be expressed—they must be experienced.

No unpleasant skidding or sidesway at the corners. No back-wheel "chatter" when the Lockheed Hydraulic brakes are quickly applied.

A smoothness over cobble roads that you have never imagined possible.

As swift as a hare—a moderate-priced car that is unsurpassed in smartness and individuality.

Tune in on WSB for Dodge Brothers Radio Program every Thursday night 7:00 to 7:30 N. B. C. Red Network.

High Compression with any gas!

The simplicity of the patented Willys-Knight engine is responsible for its remarkable efficiency. Two metal sleeves in each cylinder move smoothly, silently, up and down, one within the other, in a protective film of oil. They admit and expel gas through openings in their sides. There is no complicated valve mechanism with springs, tappets and cams. These sleeves combine with the spherical cylinder head to form a completely sealed combustion chamber. This head directs the full force of the explosion straight downward against the piston, making the most efficient use of the highly compressed gas. Such carbon as forms serves only to seal the chamber even more perfectly. As a result, the Willys-Knight engine gives high uniform compression at all times, at all speeds—and with any gas.

THE acclaim which is greeting the new Willys-Knight Standard Six definitely proves how widespread has been the demand for a low-priced Six powered by the patented Willys-Knight engine.

It has long been our aim to produce just such a car. But due to the greater cost of building the superior sleeve-valve motor, it is only today—after fourteen years of experiment and progress—that we have reached our goal.

Thousands more may now drive the Willys-Knight, the car which is praised so enthusiastically by its present owners. Thousands more may now enjoy its silent power, velvet smoothness, simple design, quick starting, rigid economy. The new Standard Six is notable for the same flashing activity, sustained brilliance, ease of control, freedom from carbon troubles and repairs.

With features of costly cars

Many features of the Standard Six you would expect only at higher cost. The engine is 45-horsepower, with thermostat, air cleaner and oil rectifier. Eight Timken bearings in the front axle insure easiest steering. Interiors are spacious and tastefully appointed, with deeply cushioned form-fitting seats and remote controls on doors, readily convenient to the hand. The steering wheel is adjustable to the driver's individual comfort. Positive, mechanical-type four-wheel brakes are provided—considered by leading engineers the most dependable kind. Perfect ventilation obtains from a windshield that opens exceptionally wide and an extra large cowl ventilator.

Two other favorite Sixes

Willys-Knight Special Six—improved, finer; now still further distinguished by such advanced features as crown fenders, window reveals, steel-rimmed roof and beautiful new color options.

Willys-Knight Great Six—taking front rank with America's most luxurious cars. Now a larger, more powerful engine insures even higher and smoother speed and even flashier acceleration.

Willys-Knight Sixes range in price from $1145 to $2695, in the Standard Six, Special Six and Great Six divisions. Prices f. o. b. factory and specifications subject to change without notice. Willys-Overland, Inc., Toledo, Ohio.

Supreme Court Justice Black, a Georgian, Tells Why He Favors Smith for President

Editor Constitution: I have a letter from an old Atlanta friend asking me about the suggestion of the name of Governor Smith as the candidate of the democratic party for president in the next campaign. That is a subject I have very much at heart, first because I have known him so intimately for so many years, second because I think his candidacy involves so many questions of principle, third because the south, my birthplace, has been drawn so prominently to the front in connection with the religious feature that has injected itself into the discussion.

Religion has never entered into my friendships, and even today, while I have always called the Atlanta party who wrote me one of my best friends, I don't know what church he belongs to. My guess would be that he is a Methodist. I do know that I am a Baptist and the grandson of Joshua Callaway, one of the early Baptist ministers who founded some 28 Baptist churches in Georgia in the early part of the nineteenth century. I believe, therefore, that I am in a position to look fairly at any sort of religious or political proposition.

My experience in the state of my birth you are more familiar with, while I was secretary to Senator Brown, a young practicing lawyer, president of the Young Men's Democratic club, and the other activities we enjoyed together before I moved to New York in 1900.

They say that every thought we have is the sum total of all our past acts, and if I have strong convictions it is because of what you, as others, know about me there, and because of my experience here as chairman of the democratic party, commissioner of accounts of New York, deputy attorney general of the state of New York, special corporation counsel of the city, acting district attorney, vice chairman of the national war labor board, and supreme court justice. I refer to these offices I held here because it happens that the very friends who contributed most to my appointment or election to them were Catholics. I do not think they favored me because I was a Baptist, but I do know they did not oppose me because I was not a Catholic. In fact in almost every case I had strong Catholic support. In thinking of Governor Smith, therefore, I am naturally influenced by my own experience.

If I were the only Protestant and the only southern man who has been favored by my New York friends who are Catholics and democrats, the case would be different, but I recall Supreme Court Justice General Roger A. Pryor, of Virginia, and Supreme Court Justice Joseph R. Bradley, of Alabama, and John H. Stanton, of Texas, who was district attorney, Edward Swann, who was district attorney, and James W. Osborne, and George Gordon Battle, and John H. Stanton, who were nominated for the same office by the democratic party, and Robert Adamson and Joseph Johnson, both of Georgia, who were judicial commissioners, and Joseph Johnson is now commissioner of public works of the city of New York.

These and a great many other Protestant southern democrats come to my mind as southern men who have been favored by northern Catholic democrats, so that when I read the hysterical attacks being made on Governor Smith by men who claim to represent the southern press, I feel like making my own personal protest. I resent the attitude of men who assume to represent the south and always hold it up to ridicule by claiming that that section can always be depended upon to defeat any candidate, however deserving he may be, whose religious views do not in every way coincide with their own. This is not the point of view of individual southerners and Protestants, and it cannot therefore be the aggregate opinion of the south as a whole.

It has not been long enough since the civil war for southern democrats to forget that without the aid of northern Catholic democrats there could have been no national democratic victory. Tammany hall itself invited Senator Hill of Georgia to come to New York, where he announced that "we (the south) are back in the house of our fathers and there to stay, thank God." There was no discussion then as to whether the south's northern allies were Catholics or Protestants, neither was there any such discussion when the northern Catholics joined southern democrats in working to defeat the Force bill that the republicans put aimed at the liberty of the southern states.

I believe the religious question is raised now only because the opponents of Governor Smith believe that it is the only thing that might prevent his nomination and election. To contend that religious qualifications alone determine the fitness of candidates for office violates every principle upon which our institutions are founded, even when invoked against an ordinary man, but to apply such contentions to a man like Governor Smith would be a disgrace to our best interests. But as much as I deprecate such contentions as harmful to the best interests of America, I protest most against the degradation to my own birth place by always holding it up as the section which can be relied upon to do the nation's dirty work, the biggest thing. Religious feeling is no stronger there than anywhere else.

I think what is everywhere frequently mistaken for religious prejudice is political jealousy. There is natural solidarity among the 18,000,000 Catholics just as there is solidarity among each of the Protestant denominations, but it is more striking in the case of the Catholics because in New York they dominate the democratic party. But they have never proscribed Protestants in politics. In addition to the fairness northern Catholics demand, we have already shown, the best guarantee of their continuing fairness is that they know they could never return to power if they ignored or failed to fairly treat the great Protestant element of the democratic party, the element that so frequently predominates everywhere outside of the city of New York.

Personally, I greatly prefer a Catholic democrat for president to a dreadnought Protestant republican or Catholic republican.

But what is most in my mind in this matter is the continual parading of the south as the land of intolerance. It is only done by disappointed spokesmen who to serve their own ends do not hesitate to drag their section down with them. May be I would not resent this so deeply if I did not know how unfair their attacks are upon a man like Governor Smith, who, without having announced his candidacy, already has nearly enough support to guarantee his nomination and election, and against whom even that great republican, the president, "did not choose to run."

WILLIAM DARMAN BLACK.

Health Talks

BY DR. WILLIAM BRADY.

Viktorian Stefansson records in his "My Life Among the Eskimos" an occasion when his party lived for several weeks on a diet of lean meat (caribou meat). They had no fat or oil. Such a diet as they managed to get was not very different from the condition so that little or no fat remained, not even the usual masses of fat behind the eyeballs. We have had out quite a number of nutrition experiments on dogs, rabbits, guinea pigs and white rats. This experiment of Mr. Stefansson's stands out quite alone. I believe there is nothing else of the kind on record. Seven men, at hard work, in cold weather, on fatless diet. It doesn't signify that numerous nutrition students have kept groups of rats or other experimental animals on such diets, for we must remember that certain vitamins are essential for man and are not essential for animals, and this is one reason why Mr. Stefansson's experiment has the greatest significance. I discussed it here recently. Now I wish to add that all of the party, including Stefansson himself, suffered from exclusive meat diet they were visited by another party of Eskimos who had some seal oil, and all hands got well again in two or three days. The seal oil was added to the meat diet.

The prominence of Sir W. Arbuthnot Lane, Bart, C. B., in England and the eminence the man has won in his own field in medicine, give his views of a health question great weight and influence. Sir Arbuthnot has recently succumbed to the lure that seduces so many of us doctors and tempts all of us—telling the world in the "public prints" as one of the codes of medical ethics calls the newspapers. Far be it from me to impose less confidence in a colleague because he breaks into the newspapers as a regular paid contributor, but I do feel that a doctor who does this accepts certain obligations, among them the obligation to justify and substantiate the scientific foundation of his teachings if these be challenged.

Lane reiterates and reiterates in his newspaper and magazine health articles, the idea that "auto-intoxication," that is, a kind of poisoning of the body by waste matter or the products of germ activity in the intestinal canal, is an important factor of ill health. He ventures even to ascribe to this factor that dread disease, cancer. To "wrong food," meaning this, and that wholesome article of diet of which, in his opinion, favors retention of waste material too long in the intestine, this titled teacher ascribes nearly all common ailments, and he specifically mentions in his list "rheumatism, appendicitis, nerves, gastric ulcer, catarrh, tendency to catch cold, adenoids, enlarged tonsils, cancer," or, in other words, what have you, you eat too much, particularly meat and starch foods, your system becomes clogged, the elimination of waste material, which should take place after each meal, is forced by harmful purgatives, and poisoning re-

Class I. Bread—Wholemeal flour, wholemeal bread, oatmeal, dried peas, beans, lentils, nuts, potatoes, root vegetables.

Class II. Butter, cream, milk, dripping, egg yolk. The latter kinds of margarine. Milk.

Class III. Fruit and Vegetables—Most fresh fruits, especially oranges, lemons and tomatoes, salads, green vegetables.

Class IV. Meat—Lean meat, fish (whether fresh or dried, frozen, flaked or salted), egg, cheese, milk.

From each of these four classes some food must be selected every day to insure a healthy diet, according to Dr. Lane.

I have no fault at all to find with this "diet" plan, if one finds it of any practical value. I should call it a fairly healthful scheme, though it seems to me that nearly any one of ordinary intelligence would select just such a diet from mere instinct or taste. The impression I get from looking over Sir William Arbuthnot's menu is that he is kidding us about "wrong foods," though he is solemn enough about the dreadful state of the bowels.

If one likes whole wheat bread it is certainly a healthful food. But one likes to vary his choice of breads, now white soft, now whole wheat, wholemeal, brown, black, that is just as healthful, I am sure. Of course, this implies that one is taking a reasonable variety of foods, such as the selections from Lane's four classes of "right foods." If the diet were exclusively bread, then unquestionably whole wheat or wholemeal bread would sustain life longer than white bread will.

If Lane is cutting out colons today he is doing it with considerably less noise than in the past. Now that he has reached the pinnacle of prominence as a regular contributor to the "public prints," he might have compassion on people who still have bowels, help them to get their bowels off their mind or their mind off their bowels. I suspect people in England suffer as much from mental auto-intoxication as the pill consuming population of America does.

Anyway, it is grand to believe that auto-intoxication doesn't happen except in certain cases of intestinal obstruction—and I don't mean constipation.

GEORGIA

BY ERNEST NEAL,
Poet Laureate of Georgia.

Georgia, I love thine every foot of ground!
Not as a stranger loves, but as a son
That feels within his arteries run
The blood whose ancient fount in thee is found;
Whose tide did 'gainst the Spaniard surging
boud;

And, warming to the savage tribes oppress,
Evoked sweet love from Tomochichi's breast.

Georgia, my race thy history has made;
Of English blood I ever shall be proud—
The blood that knows no death nor shroud.
The heart that prompted Bonaventure's shade Died not with the hand nor perished with the spade;

But thrills the living Anglo-Saxon race
In every breath and time and place.

Of the South thou art the Empire State;
And set twist mountains and the sea.
While runs thy course with Right's decree,
Wisdom, justice, moderation—motto great—
Non sibi sed alii, blest is thy fate;

The blade of war rejoices in thy sheath,
And peace and plenty smile thy skies beneath.

American I am; would wars were done—
I'm prouder still to be a Georgian, too;
And, as I gaze into her skies of blue,
I pray you bright and peaceful rising sun
May see in ports of Earth no pointed gun,
But cannon hushed and battle flags all furled,

"Reason, Love and Right," the motto of the world.

ATLANTA'S PUBLIC SCHOOLS

What They Are Doing—What They Are Trying To Do

This is the fifteenth of a series of articles on the Atlanta public schools, prepared under the direction of the Personnel Association of Atlanta. They are published to inform the parents and public about the schools and their work. The entire system will be discussed.

Character Building.
In planning and administering the education of Atlanta's school children, the public schools accept their full measure of responsibility, not only for the intellectual growth of these children, and for the training of mind and body, but for the harmonious development of the "whole child, body, mind and spirit."

Although much more is written about the first two phases of the child's threefold nature, both school officials and teachers recognize that all teaching and learning is worthless if the spiritual values, which inform the intellect and direct conduct, are neglected. Therefore, we may say the basic objective of Atlanta's schools is a moral one, the making of good citizens.

Methods of training in morals and manners cannot be standardized, because all children, even those belonging to the same race, are different. If, on the other hand, you main diet consists of wholesome bread, butter, fresh fruit or salad, meat or fish in suitable amounts, your body will be provided with everything it needs, and the large bowel will be regularly emptied, thus eliminating those toxins or poisons which constipation produces.

Apart from the plausible reference to poisons and toxins which exist only in the morbid imagination of the victim of the auto-intoxication theory, Sir Arbuthnot seems to have little or no use for the large bowel, the human colon. Let's see, was it not Sir W. Arbuthnot who once declared that to abolish the colon, or at least to edit it to a semicolon, not so many years ago? I believe that was the name of the surgeon who conceived that boon for the morbid human race.

Immediately following Lane's remarks quoted in the preceding paragraph, there is a casual allusion to the savage who shows the necessity of regular evacuation. What savage? Oh, shucks, never mind—just the savage of the story books of childhood.

Here is the "right food" as listed by Lane:

Class I. Bread—Wholemeal flour, wholemeal bread, oatmeal, dried peas, beans, lentils, nuts, potatoes, root vegetables.

Class II. Butter, cream, milk, dripping, egg yolk. The latter kinds of margarine. Milk.

Class III. Fruit and Vegetables—Most fresh fruits, especially oranges, lemons and tomatoes, salads, green vegetables.

Class IV. Meat—Lean meat, fish (whether fresh or dried, frozen, flaked or salted), egg, cheese, milk.

From each of these four classes some food must be selected every day to insure a healthy diet, according to Dr. Lane.

I have no fault at all to find with this "diet" plan, if one finds it of any practical value. I should call it a fairly healthful scheme, though it seems to me that nearly any one of ordinary intelligence would select just such a diet from mere instinct or taste. The impression I get from looking over Sir William Arbuthnot's menu is that he is kidding us about "wrong foods," though he is solemn enough about the dreadful state of the bowels.

But one likes to vary his choice of breads, now white soft, now whole wheat, wholemeal, brown, black, that is just as healthful, I am sure. Anyway, it is grand to believe that auto-intoxication doesn't happen except in certain cases of intestinal obstruction—and I don't mean constipation.

Every subject in the curriculum is used to furnish opportunities for guidance and to develop high ideals of conduct and service. In history more attention is given to the study of those great men who have contributed to human welfare and progress than to those who have merely conquered and received praise and rewards. Again and again the boys and girls are challenged to throw themselves into a certain historical situation and to project themselves through it into the future, in order that they may realize that social values are lasting, and that neither

Coppel: Chateau de Stael

BY JANE SCOTT WOODRUFF.

Part II.

It was while at Coppel that Madame de Stael contracted her second marriage with you, De Rocca, a man of 23, an officer who came to Geneva from the war in Spain, wounded and in need of rest and care. He was aristocratic, handsome and an intrepid soldier whose nature was full of a rare combination of tenderness and strength.

Although nearly twice his age, Madame de Stael's pity for the wounded soldier developed into adoration of the man. It seems that he gave her an equal measure of devotion, for he said to someone: "I shall love her so dearly that she will end by marrying me." And this she did, though for some time it remained a secret.

For a while there seemed no limit to her happiness. Then, by degrees, clouds gathered in her sky, danger threatened and one of her friends, France wrote of the emperor: "He will mete to you the fate of Marie Stuart, 19 years of anxiety and tragedy at the end."

Feeling as great fear for her soldier husband as for herself, Madame de Stael determined to seek safety in flight. Her mental courage was increased with her own courage, and she seemed only to find relief in a sleep prolonged by opium. Then she began to long for death as a release from her terrible condition.

Leaving her De Rocca child, then a tiny infant, to the tender care of a friend in the Bernese Alps, she set out with her child and her maid (a daughter), while De Rocca followed at a distance. They were bound for St. Petersburg, their route being the way of Vienna. Madame de Stael spoke of Russia as the last refuge of the oppressed.

After a weary tossing upon the tempestuous sea of circumstances of this now frail bark; it drifted to the port whence it had started. Again Madame de Stael found herself in her beloved Paris, in the Rue Royale. Her friends sought her and once more she became the center of admiration. Coppel and her chateau there near to Geneva, seemed gradually to vanish in the mists of oblivion. Paris again wholly absorbed her. She sought to recover her failing powers in a tempest of gaieties. Morning, noon and evening found her entertaining a host of convivial friends. Again she sought the use of her pen when not absorbed in the social whirl.

But it was not the same, the complexity of things seemed to her to have wholly changed. What had hitherto appeared natural and spontaneous in human nature had become, as it were, servile and artificial. Under the new regime of government she was sure she detected a cringing mockery.

For a while she tried to adjust herself to conditions as she found them, but her nature never recovered its elasticity. Indeed, with the long-borne burden of mental anxiety and a constant use of opium her bodily strength also suffered.

Like the flare which one has often observed in the mist of dying embers, hers was a longed flame of consciousness, but it did not serve as proof against the dread malady, for the stroke came and with little warning.

Every care was given by De Rocca who, though weak and suffering himself, was unceasing in his vigilant devotion. It had been said by Madame de Stael that death should be to her as evening to the day. Her own was just such a quiet one as this, for on the 13th of July, she fell asleep when the shadows of evening closed about her bed.

Welfare Society Served 2,210 Families in 1927

The Atlanta Family Welfare society, in its annual report released Saturday, cited the need of community welfare resources such as night clinics for men and women, detention ward for mental cases, increased accommodations at the Milledgeville penitentiary and other appropriate institutions for Gracewood with provision for the care of adult mental defectives as a necessary adjunct for improvement of welfare work in Atlanta.

Because of the lack of these resources and because of inadequate staff and transportation facilities, the society was unable to provide medical attention for 17 per cent of its applicants during 1927, the report said. Miss Eleanor Raoul, member of the board of directors of the institution, read this portion of the annual survey.

The remaining 83 per cent of applicants for medical attention, who numbered 2,210 families, were given attention which included operations, hospitalization, clinical treatment, nursing, and other services. The physician service, all of which was administered free. A minimum estimate made of the cost of such services rendered was $68,633.37.

Expenses Outstrip Receipts.
R. A. Magill, treasurer, reported that total receipts of the society for 1927 had been $68,633.37, and expenses had been $68,633.37. He explained that the demands had been so heavy during the winter that the association believed it advisable to go into debt rather than refuse relief to a number of cases.

Appreciation of the services rendered by the constitution in its Christmas Observances fund of 1927, which raised $2,650, was expressed by Mr. Magill for the organization.

Kendall Weisinger, director, reported the activities in scholarship administered by the society. Through good not evil is a thing of a moment. Olden of special days is a part of the program of ethical training, for we emphasize those traits of our heroes that the children can imitate in their daily lives, rather than state in an accumulation of historical data. For instance, in our primary grades we use those stories of Washington which show his love for and obedience to his mother while in the army. The children will study the events which illustrate the traits of character which made Washington a loved and trusted leader of men.

Use of Literature.
Literature furnishes a numberless examples of beauty and nobility of character. Dramatization of selected stories enables the children to live for a time in an atmosphere of high endeavor and noble striving.

These classes of geography are dwelt upon which illustrate adaptation to environment and the interdependence of the various peoples of the earth, so that a foundation may be laid for a respect and a sympathetic appreciation of nations quite unlike our own, and for all people.

Civicism is approached, not through an analysis of our national government, but through pupil participation in school government, the care of school property, orderliness and helpfulness on the playground and in the street. This also furnishes training in obedience to rightful authority and illustrates the ideal of school discipline which is another of the standards to attain, namely, a discipline which arises naturally from the environment and elicits a whole hearted rather than a formal response.

The schools do not in any way usurp the duties of either the home or the church, but by working hand in hand with these and other civic institutions they seek to give to Atlanta children a more complete development than would otherwise be possible. Through the splendid work of the P. T. A. a closer affiliation between home and school has been effected and the more harmonious development of the children made possible. Home training is carried over into the school, but under different conditions. Little children entering school for the first time display traits unknown in the home. They may have difficulty in assuming responsibility for themselves or their belongings, or they may find it hard to adjust themselves to group life. Through the cooperation of the home the careless, selfish aggressiveness, the envy and other hindering traits are overcome, and the children are enabled to find their places in both home and school society.

The banking system encourages thrift and is a more effective means of teaching preparedness. The school health program does much toward the children and the habits of personal pride, group responsibilities and cooperation.

In these and in countless other ways, the Atlanta schools are trying to so stimulate and guide the children of today that they may become intelligent, public-spirited men and women who will meet in a self-reliant yet cooperative way their duties as citizens. They are ever mindful that, as Matthew Arnold says, "conduct is three-fourths of life," and as Thoreau so forcefully expresses it, "there is no royal road to right moral conduct save through the long acquisition of right habits."

Every subject in the curriculum is used to furnish opportunities for guidance and to develop high ideals of conduct and service. In history more attention is given to the study of those great men who have contributed to human welfare and progress than to those who have merely conquered and received praise and rewards. Again and again the boys and girls are challenged to throw themselves into a certain historical situation and to project themselves through it into the future, in order that they may realize that social values are lasting, and that neither

An Appealing Call to Motherhood

BY MRS. STILES HOPKINS.

In a room warm with luxury and freighted with husband and wife, John was contentedly smoking and the sweet strains of music from the radio had just ceased.

Mary walked to the window and looked out upon the darkness of night settling over trees and shrubs. Distant but bright stars gleamed in the winter sky—so cold without, so warm within. John was startled by a low moan from his wife, and quickly stood beside her fearing she was suddenly ill.

"What is it, dear?" he said, and with hands over her ears answered: "I hear a child crying out there in the evening, and it seemed to be crying for me."

John looked anxiously at his wife—he had heard nothing. Perhaps he had better call a doctor, but Mary was never ill, and always so sensible. Seeing his concern, she hastened to reassure him: "Oh, I must be hearing things—imagination, of course."

That cold night, with the thermometer hovering around zero, a young woman, deserted by her husband, was taken to a charity ward in an Atlanta hospital, and gave birth to a little child. This little mother, frail and ill from unaccustomed exposure and hardship, closed her eyes in death never to look into the face of her baby girl.

When no relatives could be found, after several days the child was taken from the hospital and put in the nursery of the Receiving Home of the Georgia Children's Home society, among many other babies there. The kind matron and nurses did what they could, but the doctor shook his head, saying the child had barely a chance to live.

Meanwhile Mary, busy with her social activities, could not banish from her mind the memory of the cry she had heard on that cold night—a child somewhere crying for her!

After many sleepless nights she made a decision, and said to John one morning at breakfast: "I am going today to find that baby; she is crying for me, and needs me."

After searching through several institutions for the care and protection of unfortunate children, Mary late in the afternoon came to the baby cottage of the Georgia Children's Home society.

There she was met by a nurse to direct her to the cradle of a very ill baby, not expected to live through the night. To the nurse and the doctor standing by the bed she said: "I have come to take that child home with me."

After months of anxious watching with nurses and doctors in attendance day and night fighting for the life of this wee bit of flotsam of society, for the first time Mary saw the thin lips of the child curl in a faint smile, and felt the little rose petal hand close over her finger, and the baby fell into a gentle, normal breathing—that of a sleeping child.

John, sharing the weary night graces with mist-dimmed eyes, looked upon Mary and the sleeping child, and there seemed to emanate a radiance that encircled and hung like a halo around the happy face of his wife. Oh, blessed motherhood!

The last time I saw John from various pockets he produced one or sixteen pictures of the smiling, happy face of a healthy one-year-old baby girl—the proud father of a winsome, pretty child. He told me that they were now looking for another child to adopt; that he and Mary had decided to have a family of four—two girls and two boys—in due time.

The Ladies' auxiliary of the Georgia Children's Home society rejoices when one of their youngsters has the good fortune of an assured future in a home where love is. It should be the right of every child to have a home, the wise, loving and protecting care of father and mother.

Until a suitable home and parents can be found for these children, the ladies of the auxiliary cooperate with the superintendent and matron in trying to make the receiving home as cheerful and comfortable as possible, and to see that their family of 35 to 40 children have wholesome food, warm clothing, and as much individual love and care as is possible among so many in a crowded home that is inadequate to the needs of the children temporarily there. These children are placed in permanent homes as soon as suitable ones can be found after thorough investigation. Others come to take their places.

Mrs. William M. Everett, Sr., is the newly elected president of the Women's auxiliary of the Georgia Children's Home society, and is in every way equipped for her work. She has a trained executive mind, accustomed to responsibility, an accurate judgment, broad and comprehensive vision, and with a deep understanding of the needs of the children of Georgia who come under the protecting care of the Georgia Children's Home society.

Miss Emma Hardesty is the trained, competent, intelligent superintendent of the society, and has in her three years' service to the home brought the work up to a splendid standard, and has been high among child-placing agencies of the country.

Gwen Lee, Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer child placer, who was urged rapidly during the past year and was recently selected for an important part in Herbert Brenson's "The Sign of the Cross," has been chosen as one of the Wampas baby stars for the current season.

'Rose Marie' Held for Final Week Currently at Erlanger

"Rose-Marie," the outstanding success of the season begins its second and positively its last week at the Erlanger theatre tomorrow (Monday) night. People of Atlanta and vicinity who have not already availed themselves of the treat of witnessing a performance of "Rose-Marie" will leave for themselves just what is meant when it is said that this musical play is the best in a decade.

More, they will search their memory over a long, long time and we think, search in vain, to recall any musical comedy that has brought more entertainment to the city than this same "Rose-Marie." It has everything demanded of a good musical comedy.

The music is unusually beautiful, the story appealing, the settings beautiful, and the gorgeousness of the costumes would set a standard of beauty hard for any wearer to attain. As scene follows scene, each bringing with it a setting of surpassing beauty, the gowns brought sighs of appreciation from the feminine part of the audience, and admiration from the men. Any woman would be satisfied with "Rose-Marie" if there were no more to it than the costumes. But there is so much more. Reulah Benson makes a most attractive "Rose-Marie" and she has a voice of rare sweetness and superb tonal quality. Few will forget the scene in the Canadian Rockies, when Miss Benson sings her "Indian Love Call," the success of which depends fully as much on the artist who made the beautiful scene possible. Hazel Gaudreau, as Vanda, an Indian girl, probably attains to her big moment in "Tote-Tom-Tom," which with Miss Gaudreau's dancing and the amazingly clever antics of the large, perfectly trained chorus, is a new revelation in stage craft.

Peggy Pates as Lady Jane, and Houston Richards as Hard-Boiled Herman, who have already proved their ability in the comedy roles, went further still in their contribution to the success of the performance in their number, "Why Shouldn't We." To mention each of the principals who deserve praise would be to give the entire cast. Paul Donah as Jim Keaton, the hero, gives an outstanding performance. The audience takes Charles Meakin, as Sergeant Malone, right into its heart. The chorus of men, in uniforms of the Mounted Police, made familiar by the movies, contribute a colorful number. They sing with stirring and thrilling effect.

Rudolf Friml and Herbert Stothart have written a brilliant and tuneful score and Arthur Hammerstein, to his credit, has selected an intelligent cast that knows music and how to sing it. There will be the usual Wednesday and Saturday matinees. The performance on Saturday night will positively mark the last appearance of "Rose-Marie" here this season. Seats for all performances during the week may be had at the Erlanger box office and at Phillips & Crew Piano Company.

Palace.

"My Best Girl," Mary Pickford's latest picture, which comes to the Palace Monday and Tuesday, is a romance of youth, with riotous comedy to rescue you always from the verge of tears. It is a gay, thrilling tale of love and laughter.

Wednesday's feature, "Stark Love," is an extraordinary achievement in its honesty and abandonment of the customary movie method has proved to be a sound success.

Lincoln, Lee, Davis, Grant and other civil war leaders come to life in "The Heart of Maryland." Dolores Costello's latest starring vehicle, which will be shown Thursday and Friday, Saturday's feature, "Outlaws of the Red River," is a Tom Mix western thriller.

DAILEY PASKMAN TOPS NEW BILL AT KEITH'S

Dailey Paskman, the man who receives credit for bringing the theatre to radio, is now bringing the radio to the theatre and comes to Keith's Georgia this week with his famous "Radio Minstrels" from station WGBS, New York. Not only has Dailey Paskman developed the complete minstrel show for radio but he also accomplished what to many seemed impossible, he successfully broadcast "The Minstrel" from the Century theatre, New York, after Morris Gest stated that would be impossible.

Paskman's "Radio Minstrels," consists of twenty high-powered entertainers. With singers, dancers, comedians, end-men and a whole band of musicians, this is said to be one of the biggest and best of all minstrel offerings and comes with more than a year's reputation from radio station WGBS, where Dailey Paskman is the director. This is the original company with Nate Bushy, Dave Irwin, Jack Rice, George Zorn, Allan Reeves, Kramer and Stone, the "Savannah Steppers," and the "Diamond Studded Quartette."

Miss Primrose Semon, in a clever comedy conceit, "Glorifying It," is a real artist with an entertainment that always scores heavily. As a comedienne there are few women on the stage superior to Miss Semon and she will greet her many friends in Atlanta after an absence of two years.

Louise Pilson and "Ture" Duncan are billed to present a "melange of mirth and music." It is all that and more. This team works hard and fast. The laughs are close together and the combination is exceptional in entertaining value.

Guilly and Jeanny, European novelty offering, is unusual in what constitutes gymnastic effort. "On the Eiffel Tower" they have a series of stunts that are dangerous and difficult to perform.

As an added attraction for the week Miss Edna Kirby, "The Paramount Girl," will make personal appearances each day on the stage at 3 and 9 o'clock. This is the lady who "lives in a glass house." She literally spends her days behind tinted glass windows of a store and this week she is "housed" at Rich's. Miss Kirby gives talks on the making of motion pictures. She has appeared in several Paramount features and knows the studio life of Hollywood. Atlanta talent anxious for a "ting at the movies" should hear Miss Kirby and meet her personally during her visits to the theatre.

New York Theater

Guild Repertory

On Erlanger Bill

Direct from its own New York theater, the Theater Guild Repertory company will begin its first engagement in Atlanta on Monday night, February 20, with Bernard Shaw's witty comedy, "Arms and the Man." Then will follow "The Guardsman," by Franz Molnar on Tuesday night, February 21, "Mr. Pim Passes By," by A. A. Milne, on Wednesday afternoon, February 22, and Sidney Howard's much discussed comedy, "The Silver Cord," direct from the John Golden theater, New York, on Wednesday night, February 22. The principals of the company appearing in Atlanta were all selected from the Guild's New York organization, and include George Gaud, Florence Eldridge, Molly Pearson, Erskine Sanford, Fredric March, Stanley Wood, Hortense Alden, Dorothy Fletcher and Leonard Loan.

The guild is glad to be able at last to extend its activities and organize its friends and supporters outside of, as well as in, New York, and to assemble an audience for its plays in cities other than New York, similar to its home audience, which now numbers over 25,000 members. A principal purpose of the New York Theater Guild is to be an inspiration to the commercial producers of plays. While selfishly aiming to provide an adult theater for its own exclusive audience, it yet serves the broader design of extending indirectly a helpful influence to the drama's less thoughtful patrons. The guild offers its achievements as a lesson in good deeds to the business men of the stage, teaching them that the finer and better things are really appreciated, after all.

When it began ten years ago, the New York Theater Guild was considered too many years ahead of its time. At the moment, it impresses one as being up-to-the-minute, and still far ahead of the public thought, although the response has filled the theaters wherever this company has appeared. Mail orders for the local engagement of the guild, accompanied by proper remittance, may be sent in now. The box office seat sale will open Thursday morning.

Norma Seen In New Role At Howard

"The Dove" Presents Talmadge as Virtuous Young Dance Hall Girl.

Norma Talmadge is, in one respect, making her film debut in "The Dove," the headline attraction at the Howard theater this week. The reason is, "The Dove" is the great emotional star's first independently-made picture, her first work given to the public since she joined Hollywood's "royal family" United Artists. Thus, "The Dove" may be called Norma's first picture in that it is the first picture she herself has had the responsibility of making.

Norma Talmadge has done well in "The Dove." Her admirers will see her more beautiful than ever, playing more ardently and acting more emotionally. She has a role that allows her powers full expression. "The Dove" is the principal entertainer in a notorious hangout on the coast of an unnamed Central American country. Men see the beautiful dancer, learn her nickname, "The Dove," and automatically rhyme it with "love." But they don't rhyme with Norma! She has a motto of her own—"Love for a lifetime, not love for a night." If any man, over-zealous in pressing his admiration, tries to go beyond the Dove's rigid bounds, he soon learns that her name is a misnomer—better had she been called the "Eagle," to judge by the scratches her talons are able to make.

Norma's leading man in the new picture is Gilbert Roland, who also was her lead in "Camille." Roland's presence in "The Dove" should bring joy to the flapper for he is most pleasing as the tempestuous young American gambler who alone is able to win the love of the Dove with his passionate wooing.

In addition to this picture of such outstanding merit, "Making Movies" will add to the entertainment. This act is said to be a "round-trip to Hollywood," in which a complete motion picture will be made on the Howard stage.

'WHAT PRICE GLORY' RETURNS TO RIALTO

"What Price Glory" comes back to Atlanta for showing all this week, and the Rialto theater is proud of the opportunity to offer its patrons another chance at the most popular picture to see the greatest picture of last year.

"What Price Glory" also presents the three finest movie performances of the year—Victor McLaglen as Captain Flagg, Dolores Del Rio as Charmaine and Edmund Lowe as Sergeant Quirt. McLaglen's work in "What Price Glory" is said to be about the best individual bit of acting ever secured in a motion picture.

O'Brien Star Of Navy Film At Capitol

"Sharp Shooters" Great Story of Love, Romance and Adventure.

Ranging from the turbid waters of the high seas, to Broadway and to French East Africa, George O'Brien, one of the screen's most popular young stars, comes to the Capitol theater this week in his greatest picture to date, "Sharp Shooters," in which he is supported by Lois Moran, another sensational young star.

O'Brien is excellent in the role of the hard-boiled glib who has made it a point to have a new girl in every port. He has already proven his ability and versatility and in this production gives one of his best performances in lighter drama as the fighting job.

Lois Moran changes her personality in this production as a naive girl in a smoky dive in Morocco. She is exquisite in the Oriental costume, of the dancer and appealing and sympathetic in her love for the handsome American.

The supporting cast is well suited to their respective roles and includes Owen Lee, William Demarest, Noah Young, Tom Dugan and Joseph Swickard. J. G. Blystone directed.

Lois Moran, who plays the stellar feminine role, has her second chance to dance in motion pictures in this production. Lois has trained from early childhood in the art of the dance and first established a niche for herself in the world by dancing as a child in L'Opera de Paris.

When Lois started in pictures her roles always typified anything but the dance. Of course she was just a little bit disheartened. The one thing she had practiced for all her life had been relegated to the background.

In "Sharp Shooters" the script called for a French girl who was a dancer in a cafe in Morocco. Lois became elated. At last she could really dance again before the grinding of the cameras. Lois was to be a naive girl and, although she had never danced in pictures, she was just a little bit disheartened. The one thing she had practiced for all her life had been relegated to the background.

The result was that with the flaring skirt and the bangles and the swaying to the music, Miss Moran blossomed from a very sweet young girl to one of the most bewitching naive girls in the land of make-believe.

real, which changes to a new release on Thursday, will be on the same program with "What Price Glory." "What Price Glory" is a tremendous drama—net war, but with a background of war. There is a lot of comedy, and the tempo is chased away by the antics of Kiker and Lippinski, the marine privates.

"What Price Glory" was written by Laurence Stallings, a former Atlanta boy, who made good in the newspaper game in New York after getting his start here. He lost a leg in the war—in Belle Wood. That is the secret of the tremendous scenes in the picture, for Stallings knew every detail of the warfare and wrote it all into the play, from which the picture was made.

That this is an age of specialization was proved again by John Ford when he ordered the casting office to provide twins instead of one child to fill a role in "Grandmother Bernie Learns Her Letters."

"One is for crying, and one for laughing," explained the director. The production is now being edited, and will probably be released under the title, "Four Sons."

Mr. Ford will start work next on "Hogman's House," with June Collyer and William Farnum in the leading roles.

The bedroom scene next is from "The Cat and the Canary," the magnificent mystery film which returns this week to the Ponce de Leon. On the upper right is a scene from "Sharp Shooters," a great story of the sea, featuring George O'Brien and Lois Moran. On the lower left is a view from "The Latest From Paris" at Loew's Grand. Edmund Lowe, the great Sergeant Quirt of "What Price Glory," returns to the Rialto this week in that picture. On the lower right is a scene from the Keith's Georgia picture.

By ELMO HAMBY

Among the very few pictures which, in my career of typographical wanderings under the royal sign of "Before the Curtain," I have recommended to the movie patron see regardless of any danger to life or limb involved, "The Enemy" Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's picture, stands right at the top of the list.

Through the courtesy of the personable Jimmie Hannon, of the M-G-M exchange here, I was permitted to preview the picture last week, and it is pertinent to state here that film patrons may mark it in indelible ink "must see" on their list of coming films.

The great Pollock preachment against war has been graphically transferred to the screen through the medium of the famous Lillian Gish, and some of the most outstanding camera work of the past two years is to be seen in "The Enemy." It is a thrilling preachment and a dramatic one.

Here again do we have the setting in old Heidelberg, before the world war. Men of all nations sit at the feet of the pacifist doctor and applaud his teachings of universal peace. For four years they have applauded his wisdom and listened to his teachings. They have formed a great cosmopolitan brotherhood, the men from every part of the globe.

And then one night "The Enemy" comes. The presses roar, and the type flames, and war is on overnight. The universal brotherhood of yesterday is forgotten and the passions of war surge through the veins of every man. National feeling bursts asunder the companionships of four years and the mad events of a night erase the teachings of four long years.

A man slashes his best friend with a table knife. And through it all it is the woman who suffers. It is always the woman who suffers. Great hosts of men march off to war, unfeeling, mad with the lust to kill men they have never seen—to slay the friends who have slept with them—all because the insane ravages of a few cunning leaders have been loosed in the babel of "War! War!"

And the woman stays behind. Her pain is suffering and the tears. Hunger and starvation are the unseen enemies that she must face. A baby comes. Undernourished, the doctor says he must have milk or die... "but milk is a hundred marks a pint!" "He must have milk!"... Visions of ghastly painted faces—women of the streets in a trade that is always

But one young lady wrote: "Dear Mr. Teal: Thanks for the buggy ride. I certainly had a wonderful time!"

Another young lady, who, it seems, doesn't read the ads, nor go to the theater, sent a street car ticket to the Georgia Power company, with the following advice to "Ray Teal, conductor, Georgia Power company."

"Thanks for the ride on the Ponce de Leon car when you didn't have change for a dollar Monday. Here's my fare."

On the other hand, many of the recipients of the cards went a step farther and imagined—or hoped—that they were season tickets to the Howard theater and applied at the door of that house.

All the management said was "no!" Oh, well, such is life.

Midnight Show Opens New Week At Ponce de Leon

Featured by one of the most increasingly popular midnight shows set for Tuesday—Valentine day—the Ponce de Leon theater has booked another attractive program for this week.

The midnight show will bring to the Ponce de Leon stage, daily, charming Mildred Arnold, of London, in a fetching impersonation of that perennial favorite, Sir Harry Lauder, in Scottish songs and quips. In addition the London miss will mimic a number of other stage celebrities. The Mysterious Four will add extra attraction to the event, and Pola Negri in "Barbed Wire." The Col-legians and Krazy Kat will compose the screen program.

The week's bill opens Monday with "Devil Dogs," a Crescent feature, on the screen. Essentially a comedy, this new type of war picture, starring Stuart Holmes and Pauline Curley, gets a highly dramatic effect with big battle scenes and the general atmosphere of real warfare.

Tuesday brings to the Ponce de Leon the ever-popular Constance Talmadge in "Venus of Venice." In this picture Connie is cast in the role of a lovable gamin in the Italian city, and the romantic settings of canals and gondolas provide an excellent background for her scintillating talents. Antonio Moreno plays opposite her.

Beginning with the midnight show and lasting all Wednesday, Pola Negri in "Barbed Wire," tremendously dramatic story of the war front, will hold the screen. Hailed as a "steady parade of big screens," "Barbed Wire" is a tale of love struggling with race hatred while war rages, and offers Miss Negri one of the most impressive opportunities of her screen career.

"The Cat and the Canary," film version of one of the greatest stage thrillers of recent years, is booked for the Ponce de Leon Thursday and Friday. An all-star cast presents this epic of thrills and mystery, the power of which is undiminished by its adaptation to the screen.

Closing the week with a Saturday appearance is "$50,000 Reward," presenting Ken Maynard, "Tarzan," the

'LATEST FROM PARIS' IS LOEW PICTURE

Norma Shearer, in a new and sparkling role, will appear as the star in "The Latest From Paris," a big Sam Wood production, at Loew's Grand theater this week. In "The Latest From Paris" the charming Miss Shearer plays a role totally unlike all her previous roles. She appears amid the latest fashion centers and one of the features of the picture is the lavish display of gorgeous gowns. It is a scintillating comedy of modern love and business with George Sidney and Ralph Forbes featured in strong supporting roles.

As a whole the story portrayed upon the screen may be classified as unique, though there is nothing fantastic about it. Its quality of uniqueness comes from the simple fact that nobody else had ever thought of starring a girl in the role of a traveling saleswoman. At least, if the idea had occurred before it had never been put into a picture, to the knowledge of this writer.

The story has a bit of the essence of Potash and Perlmutter without in any way infringing on that series. There are two Jewish partners in the wholesale coat and suit firm of Elger & Littauer, as unlike as day and night, always quarreling, always differing as to business methods—and always friends.

Norma travels for them, is their prize representative and even sells the Diana models, the prize flop of the year in women's apparel.

Monday and Tuesday, "Justice of the Far North," gives you a pathetic story of the poor Eskimo and his hard fight for food and a hard existence and of his misfortune at the hands of unscrupulous white men.

Wednesday and Thursday you get to see some real cowboy acting. Fred Church is putting over some good stuff in his best pictures, "Prince of the Saddle." In this picture he does things in such and such a hard existence and of his misfortune at the hands of unscrupulous white men.

Friday and Saturday in a fast moving epic of the glorious west, "Painted Ponies." The gripping story of a girl whose father ran a merry-go-round and her battle against a western bad man of the meanest sort.

famous horse, and the Six Famous Beauties. This thrilling western picture comes to the Ponce de Leon widely heralded as a splendid vehicle for Maynard.

Quick doctors are probably so called because of their bills.

Appointing the Wedding Day

There are many little perplexities connected with preparations for the wedding day, but there is none so important as sending out the right kind of invitations.

The safest plan is to have these very important representatives of one's taste executed by an engraving house that has an established reputation for the manufacture of such articles. The name of such a maker upon the envelope is a guarantee that establishes beyond doubt the correctness of style.

For over fifty years past the Stevens imprint has stood for the very finest products in the engraver's art.

Spring Has Black Moments!

NOT deep, dense, heavy black—not the black of mourning—rather, the transparent, gauzy black of a moth's wing, or the filmy darkness of a misty, moonlit evening!

Spring has her black moments—when she dons sophisticated black lace, alluring black chiffon, or fascinating combinations of these two, and becomes a most intriguing and most charming figure!

We would grow tired of a too vivid Spring—a too-sweet spectrum of colors for her wardrobe. That's why Fashion, with wise eye and deft hand, created the lovely gowns of black lace and chiffon to contrast with the conventional brightness of the year's most temperamental season!

Atlantan Owns Lalique Bowl; The Work of Eminent Frenchman

MR. LILIENTHAL VALUES BOWL AT $1,000

The photograph shows a Lalique rose bowl, formerly in the famous Haviland collection, which is made of black hand-carved glass embossed in translucent emerald tints. The bowl has come into the possession of L. B. Lilienthal, 869 Briarcliff road, who values it at more than $1,000. Photo is by Francis E. Price, staff photographer.

BY LAMAR SPARKS.

She drew her longnettes from her gold-headed bag, this habitué of Fifth avenue shops, at whom I am speaking, looked about the glittering emporium until her gaze fell upon a hand-carved crystal finger bowl whose facets reflected a myriad of hues. "Ah," she sighed to the clerk behind the show case, "Lalique." She observed the stamp on the bottom. "I must have eleven others for my very own."

So the finger bowl was dispatched to France. Rene Lalique, eminent French jeweler and glass maker, received his order. He wrung his hands. He grasped his head with trembling fists. He walked the floor.

"Mon Dieu," he exclaimed, "I would not make twelve of a kind of anything."

Art Treasure. Into his objects of rarest beauty, Lalique, who for the past few years has done little individual work, carved his name. These pieces are rare. They are treasures. Three are in the Metropolitan Museum, New York. One, a rose bowl of rare beauty, has come into the personal possession of L. B. Lilienthal, prominent Atlantan, who possesses it at his home, 869 Briarcliff road in Druid Hills. Mr. Lilienthal values his urn at more than $1,000.

"Instinct guided him to do the right thing without leaving a trace of the travail of creation," it has been said of Lalique.

This feeling inspired by the work of the French master is induced anew by a glance at this unadorned rose bowl whose massive hand-carved fluted pads rising from the base over the shoulder as if they had floated into place, hold embossed frogs, resplendent, catching the light in their green backs as if they were illumined from an inner glow. The delicacy of feeling, the spiritual ecstasy characteristic of Lalique has found additional expression in this work of art. It is simple. Its coloring, dull black and resplendent green is subdued. In proportion it is perfect, in decoration, which in the works of Lalique are less ornamentation than an additional accent which perfects proportion. It is unmistakably the expression of artistic feeling that is real and heart-felt.

Unfiring Effort.

For three years Mr. Lilienthal has been keeping his eye on this museum piece which he hoped to possess. From a friend in New York, whom he visited frequently this former treasure of the Haviland collection, came into the ownership of this Atlantan connoisseur. The bowl measures 12 inches in diameter and 12 inches in height. It weighs more than 20 pounds, affording some idea of the weight and the thickness of the glass. On the trip from New York to Atlanta the bowl was packed in a hogshead, padded eight inches on each side and 12 inches top and bottom.

The process by which Lalique made his art object is of interest. The bowl was hand blown, hand carved and delicately embossed, the urn having been reheated for the process. Like a rare diamond the beauty of the object lies in the clarity and crystalline translucency of the glass itself, neither color nor ornamentation marring its innate brilliance.

Here and there, throughout the city, Atlantans possess small pieces of Lalique but nothing to compare with this rose bowl whose purity of design is mentioned in a recent issue of a well known house and garden magazine. It is indeed with pleasure that I learned of its whereabouts and pass on the knowledge to those who appreciate beauty in all of its phases and shall realize that here is a treasure which, like an old oil, shall increase in value and enrich the cultural life of any community in which it is placed.

AS FOUR WOMEN HEAR IT

THE carnival season inaugurated two weeks ago in New Orleans is of more than passing interest to Atlantans as Miss Mary Tupper, debutante daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Geddings Tupper, erstwhile residents of this city, was crowned queen by those Twelfth Night revelers, the Prophets of Persia, at their carnival-revelry ball. She impersonated "Queen Elizabeth," in the scene depicting the reception of Queen Elizabeth by the Earl of Leicester at Kenilworth castle, his home. Piquant and gracious Miss Tupper, who would have been numbered among Atlanta's debutante club of 1927-28 with her cousin, Miss Edna Raine, was richly and elegantly caparisoned, the bodice and panel down the front of her costume being of silver lace over turquoise blue silk, while the skirt, made bouffant and long, was fashioned entirely of cloth of silver. Ropes of braids studded with jewels were across the side and hung in streamers down the front. The high scalloped collar was of silver lace and jeweled. With this royal regalia she wore a crown of England and carried a scepter and huge feather fan.

Magicians converted the ballroom into an ancient English garden, moonlight, twinkling stars and floating fleecy clouds contributing brilliancy to the dazzling days when dominant Queen Bess ruled England. The Prophet of Persia had been indeed a lesson in history with Druids wearing oak-leaf chaplets, worshipping tree beliefs, harping bards followed by Roman centurions who conquered Britain giving the nation some of its best traditions. Saxons typified the tribal life of England, and Normans under William introduced the French note admitting of resplendent costumes and brandishing swords. It was truly a setting suited to Mrs. Tupper, who, costumed in medieval robes, was a gracious, smiling sovereign queening for one evening over joy, beauty and pleasure.

She was also a court lady at the ball sponsored by the Athenians, at which barbaric Rome in all its splendor pictured "Nero Fiddling While Rome Burned," presented vivid artistry, the theme of which, filled with tragedy and grandeur, lent itself magnificently to a carnival spectacle. The costume worn by Miss Tupper was of silver cloth, rhinestone studded, and the organization presented her with a mantle of blue velvet, a blue ostrich feather fan and a basket filled with tulle. The Athenians left undisturbed, the darker things of Nero's reign, presenting only the spectacular parts for the entertainment, giving a realistic and colorful setting through extensive electrical and lighting arrangement. The ballroom of the Athenaeum was transformed into a place of ancient days. The lower floor represented Nero's "Golden Palace." It was a long vista of marble columns rising to a dome of blue and silver studded with myriad lights, crystal and pink. Double canopies covered each end of the ceiling, and were of blue metallic cloth with iridescent lights, tiny and twinkling, to give the effect of an evening sky with stars. Suspended from the marble arches and over the entrances beneath the gallery hung lamps of ancient Roman pattern. The walls were hidden with scenic effects in representation of Roman corridors and the bal-cones wearing Roman soldier costumes and silver helmets, while others masqueraded as Roman nobles in silks and velvets and Roman officers with mantles and carrying shields and spears.

FLORIDA SHORES and sunshine are ever conducive to romance it seems. When the Atlanta colony begins its annual flight to the land of flowers, one wonders just which of the feminine hearts are going to surrender to Cupid's wiles and just what bachelors are going to return victorious.

One lovely Atlanta belle, who has withstood the onslaught of attention and admiration under many skies for several winters, is in danger of capitulating, we hear. A prominent mid-western surgeon whose name bears the great respect of his profession, fell under the sway of her charms, meeting her at one of those large Sunday afternoon teas that are so popular in Miami. Just a few days before he returned to the frozen north, and she to her native land.

His trip home was punctuated with telegrams and special delivery letters written en route. The mails proved entirely too slow! Even the telegraphic service was unsatisfactory! So now the phone rings each evening and the long distance operator says "Detroit is calling."

In case this lovely Atlantian decides to take up her residence in the city of automobiles, we'll tell you just whom Detroit calls each evening.

ANOTHER ECHO of romance building in sunny climes has to do with two of the city's most popular young social favorites. Perhaps the affair did not have its inception under tropical skies, but we first heard it just after both returned from a tour of the favored Florida resorts, so it is not improbable that the setting had something to do with it.

Lovely blond hair and blue eyes are a fair heritage of this only daughter of a prominent family which includes among its members many well-known financiers and business men. A member of last season's Debutante club, she was one of the most feted and admired of the winter's buds, and was introduced to society at one of the most elaborate balls of the year.

As universally beloved and admired in the social world as the girl of his choice is the groom-to-be, himself an only son and a popular figure in club and business circles. His engagement to a belle of a distant city has often been rumored and speculated upon. Who knows but that the saving moon, rising over Florida waters, turned the tide of love!

AN ATLANTA-BORN Savannah baby, Charleston Theus, Jr., celebrated his first birthday anniversary last Monday, and his charmingly original mother, the former Miss Will Hawkins, planned the cleverest contests combining an amusing quality for the mothers and a serious one for their young hopefuls, all of whom were the same age as Baby Charleston, blond and blue-eyed like his pretty mother.

A most intriguing chart was set up in the Theus home in Savannah, with the name of every child listed in alphabetical form, and every time a baby cried, its mother was to mark beside her child's name. At the close of the afternoon Mrs. Theus awarded a rubber doll, its countenance wreathed in smiles, not the least of which was the crying the most and having the largest total of checks.

To the baby possessing the greatest number of pearls teeth she awarded a tantalizingly delicious reward for a tantalizingly delicious temptation for his or her royal highness to chew on and cut other teeth, and there was also a prize to the baby who cried the longest. All the babies were fed on formula while the mothers sat down to a table groaning under delicious good things to eat. Each little one in the pond, and as there was one for them all, squeals of delight quite naturally issued from their throats.

BEAUTY, BRIGHT and vivid, delighted the masculine fancy of Dr. William Perrin Nicolson on his 71st birthday, tall vases filled with gorgeous red carnations, favorite flower of the colored Dr. Nicolson, testifying the esteem and affection in which he is regarded, and lending a festive note to the informal gathering Mrs. Nicolson planned in her husband's honor one evening last week at her Piedmont avenue home. Intimate friends, fellow members of the same noble profession, together with the wife, called to pay tribute to Dr. Nicolson, toasting him in cheerful and witty language as he turned his 71st milestone of achievement, honoring one of the south's most notable surgeons.

Back in the gay nineties a debonaire and exceedingly handsome young physician arrived in Atlanta from Richmond, Va., to hang out his shingle in the thriving city he chose as his adopted home. Back in Virginia he had been the pet and protégé of famous Dr. Hunter McGuire, in whose memory a marble statue stands today in the capital of the confederacy, and in whose office Dr. Nicolson had had the advantage of much experience after his graduation from medical college. He made a deep and abiding impression upon Atlantans, building immediately an excellent reputation, becoming a general favorite. Wherever he appeared, there was a flaming red carnation in the lapel of genial Dr. Nicolson's coat and has never been seen in public minus this flower continuing to color his radiant life.

He married Miss Carrie Crane, one of the greatest belles and beauties Atlanta has ever acclaimed, in St. Philip's cathedral with Mrs. John M. Slaton and Mrs. Wilmer L. Moore acting as bridesmaids, dressed in white organza trimmed in artificial daisies and they carried natural flowers because it was in the season when daisies were blooming. Their union has been blessed by three children, Dr. William Perrin Nicolson, Jr., who has inherited his father's marvelous surgical talent; Lowry, Nicolson, namesake of the late Colonel Robert J. Lowry, and the fairly idolized only daughter of the household, Miss Carolyn Nicolson.

THERE'S QUITE a "come out of the kitchen" angle applicable to the introduction of Miss Leila O'Keefe Kirkpatrick and Stanley Fiege whose wedding takes place next Wednesday, as he first saw his future bride wearing an all-enveloping apron of the most pronounced domestic type one Sunday when the cook in the Kirkpatrick family fell ill.

Everybody undertook to perform a task to set the machinery of the home in running order, and to Wednesday's bride-elect fell the duty of washing the dishes. The doorbell rang at the psychological moment, and Miss Kirkpatrick, shrouded in an apron glanced at the clock as she started forward to answer the bell, mentally musing that it was far too early for callers at the unorthodox hour of 2:30 o'clock.

Several young men callers stood on the porch, however, a stranger among the group being introduced as Stanley Fiege. Immediately declaring their wholesome intention of taking a part in the dish washing episode, they repaired to the kitchen, and Mr. Fiege made mental notation that a girl whose prettiness was decidedly enhanced by such a commonplace job was the very sweetheart for whom he had been searching and he lost no time in asking her to be his wife. As special agent for the Royal Insurance company in Mississippi and Louisiana, he is listed on the company roster as the youngest in 200 employees, and their honeymoon will be spent in New Orleans, lured to that carnival-loving city by its Mardi Gras festivities.

AGE IS NOT ONLY a matter of years; it is a matter of viewpoint. And from that angle it is not to be treated lightly. That this is the opinion of Rosa Ponsella, prima donna of the Metropolitan Opera company, who has delighted many an Atlanta audience, was proven beyond a doubt at her recent birthday party.

Miss Ponsella, it seems, was ushered into a hall at the Liederkranz club, where friends who realized that heavy work had prepared an elaborate surprise. Little Gloria Caruso, ten-year-old daughter of the late Enrico Caruso, met her at the foot of the stairs, handed her a bouquet of sweet-peas and led her into the hall where three hundred of her friends were assembled. And then, Miss Ponsella saw her enormous pink birthday cake topped with a silver lyre.

The tables were turned, Miss Ponsella surprised her surprise.

"Why, I am not thirty years of age," she said, glancing over the array of lighted pink candles. "I am thirty-one."

A quiver of consternation ran through the group. Otto Kahn seemed a bit surprised. Elinor Glyn, Mrs. Caruso, Romano Romani, and even Miss Louise Homer experienced a new sensation. Here was a woman desiring to be exact even at the expense of a year in her age. Mayor De Bussey nodded approvingly.

A recent statement by Daniel Wilford, president of the Baltimore and Ohio railroad, who is 67 years of age, throws some light on this announcement of America's premier dramatic soprano.

"I am 50 years old," he remarked on his birthday. "That is my viewpoint and it should be. My outlook shall continue to be one of a man of 50 years of age."

Miss Ponsella was 31. Her outlook was thirty-one. Her achievements testified her 31 years of existence. Her outlook, her point-of-view and her attitude were that of a woman of thirty-one. And thirty-one, not thirty, she preferred, we presume, to remain.

Miss Conyers Weds Mr. Whitman At Quiet Ceremony in Athens

Athens, Ga., February 11.—The wedding of Miss Lila Conyers, of Atlanta and Athens, and Marshall Lane Whitman, of Atlanta, was quietly solemnized Saturday afternoon at 2 o'clock at the residence of Dr. and Mrs. Jere M. Pound on the campus of the Georgia State Teachers' college. Dr. W. P. King, pastor of the First Methodist church, read the service and Miss Ida Pound played the wedding march from "Lohengrin" on the piano, accompanied on the violin by Miss Daisy Drake as the bride and her mother, Mrs. Abba Johnson Conyers, descended the stairway into the broad hall and joined the groom at the altar. During the ring ceremony McDowell's "To a Wild Rose" was rendered.

The room where the altar was reared was decorated in green and white, a mass of palms and ferns interspersed with silver candelabra holding white tapers banded against the tall white mantel, smilia outlining the folding doors, tops of windows and along the stairway in the hall which showed a profusion of yellow spring flowers. The altar was flanked with silver vases filled with white carnations, the same fragrant blossoms being used on the piano.

Beautiful Bride. The beautiful bride wore a smart spring model of sand-colored georgette crepe, with coat, hat and other accessories in blending shades. Her flowers were a shower of sweetheart roses and valley lilies.

A reception followed, Mrs. Conyers and Mrs. Pound being assisted in receiving by members of the college faculty. The dining room was in pink and white, a silver basket of pink carnations centering the lace-covered table and silver candlesticks filled with pink tapers gracing the mantel and buffets.

Mrs. James R. Whitman, of Atlanta, mother of the groom, wore a costume of black satin and a hat to match, and her shoulder bouquet was of Parma violets. Mrs. Albert H. Lakin, of Emporia, Kan., sister of the groom, wore Chinese blue chiffon, with close-fitting hat to match and a shoulder bouquet of orchids. Miss Elizabeth Whitman, of Atlanta, another sister, wore an ensemble of pou-dre blue crepe, worn with a small gray hat, and a shoulder bouquet of orchids. Mrs. Wallace Boyd, of Atlanta, cousin of the groom, was gowned in a smart model of black satin, worn with a French hat of black felt.

Wedding Journey. Mr. and Mrs. Whitman will motor through North Carolina on their wedding journey, with Asheville as a destination, returning to Atlanta for their future residence. Their marriage unites families of culture and distinguished ancestry in Georgia.

Among the out-of-town guests attending the marriage were Mr. and Mrs. James R. Whitman, Mr. and Mrs. Wallace W. Boyd, Mrs. Albert H. Lakin, of Emporia, Kan.; Miss Elizabeth Whitman, Mr. W. I. Bennett, Misses Margaret and Caroline Bennett and Alex Powell.

Reports from officers and standing committees were made, showing that all cooperation in making the Oconee chapter rank as one of the best in the state. The treasurer's report showed a goodly sum spent for the pleasure and help of the old veterans and educational purposes.

The registrar's report gave the chapter 20 new members, while six names were voted on and accepted at this meeting.

The annual historical essay contest was presented by the chairman, Mrs. Chivers, who asked the chapter in session to offer rewards to the consolidated school. Miss Margaret Pritchett offered to give a county-wide prize of $5 in gold for the best essay.

The chapter will put on a historical pageant during February and definite plans for this were outlined. Mrs. J. W. ## Un Mot Ici, Est Bien

By MRS. J. J. HARRIS, Editor Georgia Division, U. D. C.

In keeping with the February suggestions of education is the historical program issued on today's official U. D. C. page in The Constitution by Mrs. Herbert M. Franklin, of Tennessee, state chairman for historical programs, the program for February being issued in a one-column box poem on the page followed every month thereafter by the program scheduled and prepared in pamphlet form for 1928. The U. D. C. historical motto is "Loyalty to the Truth of Confederate History," and the key word is "Preparedness," with the use as its flower. These programs are perfect in correlation of the organization, and Mrs. Franklin's talents have ever been of signal importance to the advancement of the Georgia division U. D. C. Mrs. J. L. Beeson, chairman of the historical essay contest, today sends her rules and she is doing consistent and systematic labor and the contest will no doubt go far in material development under her guidance.

Today is Georgia day. It is hoped that many chapters sold flags to finance the Helen Plane scholarship fund. It means education for some worthy child whose after life will repay your efforts.

The star chapter requirements appear today on the official page in The Constitution, sent by Miss Mary Booker, West Point. As chairman of that department she has considered all details carefully so that a gold star flag will mean real merit. She is to be commended upon her splendid effort. The year of 1928 will go down in history as the memorial year to Alexander Stephens. With his statue placed in the Hall of Fame at Washington there still remains for adoring Georgians the privilege of keeping the income burning ever before his shrine in our memory. Looking over memoirs of Alexander Stephens one finds that at Liberty Hall he performed the greatest work of his life. He composed the two volumes, "The War Between the States." It has been said that these volumes were the finest defense of the south and the clearest statement of the south's position that can possibly be set up. If Alexander Stephens had done nothing else, this great contribution to the literature of the war would have made him immortal. Too fragile to take the field as an officer in the army, he devoted the intellectual side of his life to the service of his country and to the defense of his contemporaries. Alexander Stephens was a gladiator, indeed! So no better memorial could be perpetuated in Georgia than the Alexander Stephens institute, which the U. D. C. of Georgia have taken under their care, and which will be pushed to an early finish.

Our Mrs. Horace Holder, Athens, chairman of the Alexander Stephens institute and Kennesaw of this immortal hero, is doing brilliant work for the cause of the school and is looking to the Georgia division to help her to carry out her plans. Let us hope the above quotation will prove prophetic.

Miss Suttles Weds Mr. Brooks At Lovely Afternoon Ceremony

Miss Hazel Claire Suttles, daughter of Elie Pendleton Suttles and the late Mrs. Suttles, became the bride of Clinton Conwell Brooks, son of Mr. and Mrs. G. C. Brooks, of Forsyth, Ga., at a beautiful ceremony solemnized at 4:30 o'clock Saturday afternoon at the Park Street Methodist church.

Dr. Marvin Franklin read the marriage service, using the ring ceremony.

The church was elaborately decorated for the occasion with palms and Easter lilies. Stately palms formed the background of the altar, on either side of which was placed cathedral candelabra holding burning white tapers.

A program of nuptial music was rendered on the organ by John Moore, and Mrs. Eloise Sullivan gave several vocal selections.

The bride was attended by her sister, Miss Hulda Mae Suttles, maid of honor, and Miss Verna Irene Brooks, sister of the groom, bridesmaid.

The maid of honor was beautifully gowned in pale blue chiffon over flesh-colored satin, with hat and shoes to match, while the bridesmaid was charming in a becoming gown of pale green chiffon over flesh-colored satin. Both carried bouquets of roses, sweet-peas and snapdragons.

The groom was attended by his brother, Cuyler W. Brooks, Jerome Elliott and W. L. Hardin, brother of the bride, acted as ushers.

The bride was given in marriage by her brother, Carl Hood.

She was radiantly lovely in a gown of cream chiffon over real lace, with a hat to match. Her shower bouquet was of white roses and lilies of the valley.

Among the out-of-town visitors were Mr. and Mrs. G. C. Brooks, parents of the groom, of Forsyth.

Mrs. G. C. Brooks, mother of the groom, was becomingly gowned in a modish suit of tan with shoulder corsage of Parina violets.

Following the ceremony the wedding party and members of the families were entertained at an informal reception by Miss Suttles and Miss Brooks, sisters of the bride and groom, at their home, 684 Kennesaw avenue, N. E., after which the bride and groom left for a tour of points of interest in Florida. Returning February 20, they will be at home at 946 Juniper street, N. E., apartment 6.

Careless Washing Spoils Children's Hair

Any child can have beautiful hair—healthy and lustrant. It is simply a matter of shampooing.

Proper shampooing makes the hair soft and silky. It brings out all the real life and lustre, all the natural wave and color, and leaves it fresh looking, glossy and bright.

While children's hair must have frequent and regular washing to keep it beautiful, fine young hair and tender scalps cannot stand the harsh effect of ordinary soaps. The free alkali in ordinary soaps soon dries the scalp, makes the hair brittle and ruins it.

That is why thoughtful mothers everywhere now use Multisilf Coconut Oil Shampoo. This clear, pure and entirely harmless product brings out all the real beauty of the hair and cannot possibly injure it.

Two or three teaspoonfuls of Multisilf is all that is required. It makes an abundance of rich, creamy lather which cleanses thoroughly and rinses out easily, removing every particle of dust and dirt.

It leaves the hair soft and easy to manage and makes it fairly sparkle with new life, gloss and lustre.

You can get Multisilf Coconut Oil Shampoo at any drug store.

A four-ounce bottle lasts for months. (adv.)

The Seeing Silence.

God's silence often perplexes us. One of the most surprising incidents narrated in the Gospels is that in which when a poor woman cried to Jesus for help He answered her not a word. With face turned away He seemed to treat her suppliant with cold indifference. Yet His indifference was only seeming. In His heart was warm sympathy and compassion for her in her sorrow and need, and in the end He gave her far more than she had asked.

Southern Methodist W. M. U. Reaches Golden Jubilee Year

It is of interest that 1928 is the golden year of jubilee in the history of the Woman's Missionary Society of the Southern Methodist church. The Woman's Missionary society was first organized in Atlanta, Ga., May 23, 1878, in the First Methodist church. In the 50 years following this historic event, the work has grown mightily. Then there was a membership of less than a hundred members, now a powerful membership of more than 280,000 members. Then there was one small school in China, while now there are many schools and colleges in eight different countries that are supported by the Woman's Missionary society.

The first society which met in Atlanta enrolled 54 members; now the society can scarcely be counted by numbers. Then the financial strength was represented by a few gifts which seem beside the generous sum of $1,578,000 which was poured into the treasury of the society in the year of 1926, which was the great year marking the completion of the Bennett memorial fund.

One week of the jubilee year is to be devoted to a great thank offering which will enable the leaders of the present day movement to advance in every line. The primary objective of the jubilee year is to be the attainment of a higher spiritual standard by the members of the society. The great goal is spiritual excellence.

St. Mark's Church

The Woman's Missionary society of St. Mark's Methodist church held its business session at the church Monday afternoon. Mrs. John Stewart, president, presided. Mrs. E. W. McQuinn, recording secretary, explained what is meant by the dues and special and where they are directed. Mrs. Frank Freeman gave a talk on "Stewardship."

Officers of 1928 are: President, Mrs. John D. Stewart; first vice president, Mrs. F. O. Walsh; second vice president, Mrs. W. B. C. Smith; recording secretary, Mrs. J. S. Robinson; corresponding secretary, Mrs. A. W. Stubbs; treasurer, Mrs. J. S. Brodson; assistant treasurer, Mrs. A. Streyer; Bible and mission, Mrs. W. H. Hart; social service, Mrs. W. S. ## Lutheran Church To Keep Mission Prayer Day.

The world day of prayer for missions sponsored by the federation of women's boards of foreign missions and council of women for home missions, which will be international, national, territorial and international, will be observed at the Lutheran Church of the Redeemer, Trinity avenue and Capitol place, Friday, February 24, 1928, the time to be announced later.

W. M. S. of Georgia Synod Holds Meet At Lutheran Church

The fourteenth annual convention of the Woman's Missionary society of the synod of Georgia and adjacent states was in session January 24, 25 and 26 at the Lutheran Church of the Redeemer, Dr. Charles McLaughlin, pastor. The president, Mrs. Long, of Savannah, presided. Two of the outstanding speakers were Miss Katherine Fells, of Guntersville, Ala., and Mrs. Herbert C. Bell, of the Lutheran church of the United Southern Church of America.

Thirty-four years on the mission fields was the source from which many interesting stories of conversion to Christianity were drawn by Miss Fells. Andra Christian college and a Lutheran orphanage for boys and girls are institutions due to foreign missionary endeavors of the Lutheran church. The hospital at Guntersville, accommodating 100 patients, is an outstanding movement of the women of the U. S. C.

The extensive and far-reaching work of home missions, covering 465 points, including 13 nationalities, covering territory from Alaska, Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Ontario province, French Montreal, Nova Scotia, South Texas and west to the Rocky mountains and to Santiago, was enthusiastically related by the speakers. It is a noteworthy fact that the United Lutheran church was the first church body to bridge the gap between the north and the south.

Mrs. W. E. Pugh, of Jacksonville, Fla., synodical treasurer reported a membership of between 600 and 700 women, with contributions covering home and foreign missions of $4,170. There are 32 Lutheran churches in the south.

Appropriate music was rendered by the choir.

The officers of Woman's Missionary Society of Synod of Georgia and adjacent states as elected for the ensuing year, are as follows: President, Mrs. Charles P. McLaughlin, Atlanta; first vice president, Mrs. H. H. Kuck, Savannah; second vice president, Miss Lottie Long, Savannah; recording secretary, Mrs. G. L. Labount, Augusta; statistical secretary, Miss Lala McGraw, Atlanta; treasurer, Mrs. W. E. Pugh, Jacksonville, Fla.

The delegates chosen to represent the synod at the biennial convention of Women's Missionary Society of the United Lutheran church, to be held in Johnston, Pa., in June, were Mrs. Charles P. McLaughlin and Miss Lala McGraw.

Union Services Are Planned for Lent.

Mrs. Frank Woodruff, Episcopal editor, sends the following article: A great forward step in the spiritual progress of Atlanta will find its consummation during the season of Lent when union services, comprising the different evangelical congregations of the city, will be held at noon in a downtown theater.

Men of powerful religious stature in the various denominations have been chosen to bring the message at these noonday meetings, and there is little doubt that the attendance, such as wish to step aside from the crowded highway of worldly affairs during that season of meditation and prayer, to seek refreshment for the soul, will fill the building to its capacity.

This is truly a great end to be achieved and another end to be achieved is that the community, one magnified family, will unite in doing homage to God in the name of His blessed Son.

As the time for these daily union services draws near detailed plans will be given out, but it has pleased the federated church women to be among the first to herald this great spiritual accomplishment, and especially so since they find in its basic elements something strikingly akin to those upon which their own organization is founded.

Episcopal Auxiliary Officer Presides at Convention in Rome

Mrs. Henry W. Davis, president of the Episcopal auxiliary of the diocese of Atlanta, who presided at the twenty-first annual convention of that body which was held in Rome January 25-26.

The 21st annual convention of the Episcopal auxiliary of the diocese of Atlanta was held in Rome January 25 and 26, with Mrs. Henry Davis, of Atlanta, presiding. Sixty-five delegates were in attendance coming from many points in the northern half of the state.

The meeting began with a corporate communion service held in St. Peter's church, followed by a meeting of the executive council, made up of parish presidents and officers and chairmen of committees. Mrs. Davis and Mrs. J. H. O'Neill, of Rome, made the address of welcome, to which Miss Rosa Woodberry, of Atlanta, responded. A telegram from the Federated Church Women of Georgia was read extending their greetings.

Mrs. Davis explained to the meeting the work of the federation and the part the Episcopal women take in its work. The treasurer's report showed that all pledges and obligations had been fully met. The secretary reported the names of those who had died during the year, and Mrs. Charles P. McLaughlin and Miss Lala McGraw.

Reports.

This offering will be $4,574 in bank at the close of the year. Mrs. Talmadge urged all to redouble their efforts that the offering may be greatly increased by that time.

State W.C.T.U. Editor Writes Interestingly of Organization

My M. Frances Meadows Burghard.

In writing of the removal of the state headquarters of the Georgia Women's Christian Temperance Union to the Throver building in Atlanta, in last week's column, and in commenting on the fact that a few days after its establishment there the accumulations of grime and smoke disappeared from the building by the new steam process of cleaning, I asked, Is this an example that things are always cleaner wherever the W. C. T. U. goes? And saying that the letters W. C. T. U. have been interpreted to mean W-Washing-Cleaned-Up-Taken U-Conditionally because of the "dry cleaning" work of the organization. Referring to the above, a gentleman friend in Atlanta wrote a note of welcome to the W. C. T. U. in which he suggested a new meaning for the letters—an acronym which states a truth, furnishes a campaign slogan and is apropos: "W-Wet-Candidates-Totally Upright."

The letters W. C. T. U. have meant different things to different people during the more than half a century just passed. To the mother-hearted women of the south and north long ago they meant W-Come-T-U-Unit; to the saloon-keepers, W-oman's Continuous-Troubling U-nion; to the other liquor traffic interests, W-Come-T-U-Upset, also W-C-T-U; to the drinker, W-C-T-U-Tank U-p; to the children, Whisky Can't Take U-s; to the newly enfranchised, W-oman's Citizenship Training U-nion, and to the women of the church, the home and the school who would like to "do good according to a plan" the invitation W-ell-Come-T-U-s.

Headquarters Welcomed.

The W. C. T. U. appreciates the welcome and will work to carry out the suggestions which are in accord with its plans. The Atlanta friend wrote, "I welcome the W. C. T. U. headquarters to Atlanta and trust their militant Christian womanhood will inspire the registered voters of Atlanta to watch the ballot box, and elect dry constables and sheriffs, elect dry police officials, elect dry councilmen, elect dry aldermen, elect dry judges, and then support them. That's how the wetts do it. Make every candidate for even the most humble office tell how he stands. Let's don't elect a criminal to catch a criminal." This is only one of the many welcomes the W. C. T. U. headquarters has received from Atlanta and north Georgia friends, but most of them have been verbal.

Miss Ruby Pratt Rivers, efficient secretary and manager of the W. C. T. U. headquarters, came to Atlanta when the headquarters were moved here from Macon a few weeks ago. She has held this position since the establishment in January, 1926, and friends from over the state drop in to look over the latest literature, secure supplies and talk over plans with the busy secretary, and with the state president, for Mrs. Marvin Williams has an office at the headquarters now. She was born of devout parents in a Methodist parsonage, her father, Rev. W. F. Rivers, a poet as well as a preacher, was a member of the North Georgia conference many years. After graduation from a junior college she studied at Brenau, then at Columbia university in New York.

Miss Rivers was a teacher, secretary to college presidents, holding positions at Brenau college, also at Agnes Scott college and Mercer university, and business positions at Asheville, N. C., and Washington, D. C. ## Sure Way to Get Rid of Dandruff Girls—if you want plenty of thick, beautiful, glossy, silky hair, do by all means get rid of dandruff, for it will starve your hair and ruin it if you don't.

It doesn't do much good to try to comb or wash it out. The only sure way to get rid of dandruff is to dissolve it; then you destroy it entirely.

To do this, get about four ounces of ordinary liquid arvon; apply it at night when retiring; use enough to moisten the scalp and rub it in gently with the finger tips.

By morning, most, if not all, of your dandruff will be gone, and two or three more applications will completely dissolve and entirely destroy every single sign and trace of it.

You will find, too, that all itching and digging of the scalp will stop, and your hair will look and feel a hundred times better.

You can get liquid arvon at any drug store. Four ounces is all you will need, no matter how much dandruff you may have. This simple remedy never fails.

SOCIETY'S TOAST TO SAINT VALENTINE

Valentine Sentiment Sways Week's Social Gaieties

Valentine day is creeping upon the city like a wave of sentiment from the long ago. Red arrow-pierced hearts are suggesting to Atlantans the saintly martyr who died for his faith. Cupids, coy and gilded and potentially alert are arousing fond lovers to a sense of their power. And here and there, when the day shall truly arrive, men and maids will follow that age-old custom of drawing from a common receptacle names of the opposite sex, so that each gentleman and lady shall procure a valentine.

Clubs of the city, which habitually intensify the spirit of an occasion, will contribute to Valentine day. The East Lake country club will observe the occasion with a dinner-dance. Members are requested to mail valentines to the club to be distributed by a tiny little cupid, at the brilliant dance at which members of this popular club will assemble to celebrate the day. Adding its part to the festivity of the evening the Piedmont Driving club will hold a dinner-dance which will prove one of the most elaborate affairs preceding the Lenten season.

Several Weddings.

Legend tells that St. Valentine day has been long chosen as a time to plight one's troth. A bevy of Atlanta girls will follow this dictate of Cupid throughout the years. Miss Bessie Allen will be wedded to Ira Hamilton Harbin and Miss Viola Elizabeth Euler, of Culloiden, will plight her troth to Sanford Edward Fincher, of Atlanta, on Tuesday, February 14. Others who have chosen this week to wed are Miss Mary Jimmie Paulino, whose marriage to Asbury Crutcheff Taylor will take place Saturday evening, February 18; Miss Lella O'Keefe Kirkpatrick, who will become the bride of Stanley Lyons Fiege Wednesday, February 15; Miss Florence Sidney Burney and Augustus Hartsfield Stevens, of Atlanta, will be married February 18 at the First Methodist church of Rome; Miss Glenna May Satterwhite and Dr. George Smith Alexander, of Kennesaw, N. C., will be wedded Wednesday evening, February 15.

Society Assembles At Piedmont Club.

Outstanding among the social events of the week-end was the dinner-dance given Saturday evening at the Piedmont Driving club, the affair assembling a large throng of society and a number of attractive visitors.

Mr. and Mrs. Harry E. Huff were hosts at a party in compliment to their guests, Mr. and Mrs. L. M. Modette, of Cleveland, Ohio. Covers were placed for Mr. and Mrs. Modette, Mr. and Mrs. Philip L'Engle, Colonel and Mrs. E. H. Danforth, Dr. and Mrs. Julian Huff and Mr. and Mrs. Huff.

Joe Haverly, Jr., of Birmingham, Ala., had as his guests Mr. and Mrs. M. H. Elder and Miss Margaret Elder.

Mr. and Mrs. Rembert Marshall entertained a group of friends in compliment to Walker Till, of Nashville, Tenn., who is their guest for the week-end. Covers were placed for 12 guests.

Mrs. MacDougald Honors Prominent Visitors.

Mrs. A. P. Brantley, of Blackshear, Mrs. W. W. Stark, of Commerce; Mrs. S. V. Sanford and Mrs. Lamar Rucker, of Athens, and Mrs. A. H. Brenner, of Augusta, prominent Georgia clubwomen, will be honor guests at the informal luncheon Tuesday, February 14, at which Mrs. John F. MacDougald, president, urges former seminary students to attend, as each graduate of the school is a member of the alumnae.

Agnes Scott Club To Sponsor Alumnae Banquet Feb. 22

The Atlanta Agnes Scott club will sponsor an alumnae banquet on the evening of February 22 at the Atlanta Athletic club. This is one of the most important days in the college calendar, being the birthday of Georgia Washington Scott, founder of the college, and for many years has been the occasion of celebration at the college. Three years ago a radio program by the college glee club was instituted and alumnae clubs all over the country meet on this date to listen in and send messages.

This year alumnae clubs in Birmingham, Mobile, St. Louis, New York, Decatur, Charlotte and many other places will have banquets at the hour of broadcasting. The radio program which is under the direction of Mr. and Mrs. Lewis H. Johnson, music directors of the college, will take place from 6:30 to 7 o'clock. The banquet will be held at 7 o'clock and for this an attractive musical program is being arranged.

Mrs. Whitaker Honors Mrs. J. W. Franklin.

Mrs. W. D. Whitaker entertained at dinner at her home on Peachtree street Saturday evening, honoring Mrs. J. W. Franklin, of Philadelphia. The valentine idea was carried out in the lovely decorations. The table was ornamented with a basket of magnificent red carnations. Mrs. Whitaker wore a becoming model of black georgette trimmed in rhinestones. Mrs. Franklin was lovely in green georgette.

The guests included: Mr. and Mrs. J. M. Slattery, Mr. and Mrs. A. J. Bohn, Mr. and Mrs. C. Y. House, Mr. and Mrs. J. Sterling, Mr. and Mrs. A. P. Burke, Mr. and Mrs. J. McMillen, Mr. and Mrs. Frank Vaughn and Miss Anna Brundidge.

With the approach of the romantic season of St. Valentine, society's attention turns to thoughts of love as expressed in the dainty lace paper trifles that are symbolic of the occasion. A trio of lovely belles of the sub-deb contingent whose faces are framed in love's emblems above, include at the upper left Miss Jane Tway, beautiful young daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Charles W. Tway; at the upper right, Miss Elizabeth Spalding, younger daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William F. Spalding, and one of the most popular members of the younger set; while at the lower center is a charming likeness of Miss Julia Meador, only daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Thomas D. Meador, Jr. The photographs are the work of Rogers and Farmer.

Cooperation of Clubwomen Is Exemplified in Farm Exhibit

"The results of the cooperation of clubwomen is strikingly exemplified in this exhibit," said Mrs. Ira E. Farmer, chairman home demonstration, Georgia Federation of Women's Clubs, at Rich's store, where the work of Georgia farm women is on display. The rural woman has kept alive the old handicraft of the days when all furnishings were made in the home but these women were not in touch with markets and did not know in many instances that there was a demand for this work or the type of work that would be salable. "The city clubwomen sensed the demand for these old examples of handicraft brought about by the early American movement and that decorative value to Georgia."

THE Spring and Summer furs at Chamberlin-Johnson-DuBose company are unusually beautiful. Who could blame the proud possessor of one of the new beautiful summer furs, if she indulged in flaunting it before the admiring eyes of others? Who could chide her—for with every costume whether it be sports wear, street wear, or at any fashionable gathering, you will find the smart ensemble completed by the addition of a fur.

I saw the most varied assortment of furs at Chamberlin-Johnson-DuBose company yesterday. There were three beige fox furs that were especially fine. They were formerly $125 and are now selling at $89.50. Then there were cross fox neckpieces—a cross between a silver and a red fox—that ranged in price from $100 to $200.

But to my surprise I found a genuine silver fox, a very rare and fine fur, that is regularly priced at $408.50 and is now sold down to $298.50. This and many other good values, such as the red fox furs that range in price from $50.00 to $125.00 also all of the newest shades in furs for Spring and summer wear can be seen at Chamberlin-Johnson-DuBose company.

THIS is a day of specialists. There are experts in all lines of business—but to give a perfect permanent wave—that is an art. The operator must be skilled in order to produce the desired effect. The natural looking, yet permanent wave.

Mrs. Maude Herrington is one of the best beauty culturists in Atlanta. In her shop the Eugene Permanent Wave is given exclusively.

She is a graduate of the Eugene Method and has had eight years of experience. Only the latest Eugene Machines and materials used. Assuring you of the most beautiful and natural looking wave that can be had in the city for any price.

Mrs. Herrington can wave grey or dyed hair successfully, without changing the color of the hair, or injuring it in any way. Come in and let her explain her method of waving those few inches of new hair without waving over the old wave.

All lines of beauty culture by experts, work guaranteed. Eugene Permanent wave $8.00, manure $6.00, marcel $5.00. The Eugene Permanent Wave Parlor is located at 397 Wynne-Claughton Building, Walnut 3337.

There has been much discussion about a person's weight in connection with health and fashion and although the health side of the question is alone of vital importance to everyone, the woman of today has the added point of fashion to greatly consider.

To look well in one's clothes one must have a slim figure, but the problem is how to accomplish this. Maison Adolphe, 822 Peachtree street, has the famous Ring Roller Reducing Machine for reducing any part of the body. The Ring Roller will not harm your health, as many methods of reducing do, but merely gives your body a deep-rooted massage, breaking down the fat particles so that they can pass off through the blood.

Adolphe will absolutely guarantee to reduce you and if you will take the treatments any time during this month, your money will be returned to you if you are not satisfied. But this wonderful new machine will absolutely reduce any part of the body.

At Maison Adolphe's Beauty Salon you will find beauty culturists who have studied in the famous beauty schools of Paris.

Mr. Paul has recently returned from Europe with many new ideas and methods for serving his large Atlanta clientele. In a word the Shop of Maison Adolphe is one of the most complete and best equipped beauty salons in the south.

Rejuvenation, contouring treatments, hair cutting, hair dressing, permanent waving, and manicuring. Expert operators trained in the most modern methods of beauty culture are ready to serve you at the beautiful Beauty Salon of Maison Adolphe, 822 Peachtree street.

Angora is one of the really important sports fabrics for resort wear and when it appears in a three-quarter length coat or short jacket over a white linen frock, it is decidedly chic.

Linen dresses with and without sleeves, the sleeveless dresses are especially designed for the tennis enthusiast, and in both the one and two-piece types accompanied by both long and short coats of colored angora.

Nothing is quite so chic for evening and for daytime wear under southern skies as the new off-shades of white that smart fashionables affect with beige complexions which incidentally are best acquired gradually by increasing the length of time for one's sunbath with each day.

Discoveries in "Chic" At Frohsin's.

THE Ensemble is the outstanding Spring mode. It could appropriately be called the highlight of spring fashions, so universally has it been accepted by smart dressers.

At Frohsin's on Whitehall street you will find a complete selection of Ensembles, in their many variations and combinations, both for sports and afternoon wear.

One of the many beautiful ensembles that I saw at Frohsin's was of grey covert cloth. The coat of this three-piece suit was three-quarter length, lined with black and white crepe de chine. The skirt of covert cloth was beautifully tailored. The white flannel blouse was made exceedingly attractive by a diamond shaped piece of corresponding grey covert cloth, beautifully nongrammared and edged in black and applied on the front of the blouse. This beautifully tailored ensemble was $100.

Another that especially attracted my attention was of navy blue poret lined with a printed silk-white background decorated with hearts and apples of red and black. The dress was of printed silk of the same design. This ensemble was priced at $39.75.

These Frohsin's dresses exemplify the prevalence of the ensemble costume for spring and summer wear, by the completeness of every detail, and the diversity of style, fabric, color and combination. In a word, they are typical of all of the smart frocks that can be seen at Frohsin's—Whitehall street.

The treatments do not pain you in any way, do not harm the skin, and absolutely remove unsightly hair growths.

FLOOR SCRAPING IN PROGRESS AT CONSTITUTION MODEL HOME

Beauty Will Be Enhanced By Many Tiling Features

Installation of Electric Fixtures Is Started; Aspect of Interior Will Be Transformed by Artistic Lighting Ornaments.

BY ERNEST RUBIN.

Only the irresistible delight of watching each detail of progress and viewing again the unusual features of The Constitution model home could induce you to enter the nearly completed dwelling in Haynes Manor in face of the deafening whines and shrieks that greeted you on your visit last week.

Perhaps a bit of curiosity concerning the cause of the uncanny noises played some part in abetting your courage. From the first workman you met on entering the dream house you learned that floor-scrappers were responsible for the noises. But floor-scrappers are a necessity. The shrieking and whining will soon be gone and the only evidence of the floor-scrappers' work that will remain will be a smooth, satin-like finish on what a week ago was a rough, unsightly floor.

Scraping of floors, which last week featured construction progress at the model home, being built by Atlanta Realty & Construction company, master builders, and sponsored by The Constitution in cooperation with the Home Owners Institute, is now wracking with its severe strain on the ear drums. But you peeped into the living room and observed how the floor-scrapping was bringing out the natural beauty of the oak floors. Later, this beauty will be preserved with lasting varnish.

No doubt, in this age of machinery supremacy, you were surprised to see the floors of the model home being scraped by hand workers. This is the method that has been specified by architects and builders as being in line with the fundamental principle of this undertaking—to use the best methods and materials in order to encourage building of homes that will be most satisfactory and ultimately most economical.

While you were standing in the doorway, you heard the supervisor caution the painters to be sure to give the scraped floors a coat of filler and cover them with paper before any one walks on them.

Hard Tile Driveway.
You stepped outside the home and walked about the lot that has a commanding view of the beautiful Haynes Manor terrain, hoping that the noises on the inside will soon come to an end and give you chance to enjoy the home while the workers are eating lunch. Watching the tiling of the driveway and outside steps, you realize this home is going to be a masterpiece in tile and masonry. You recall the rapid pace taken in selection of the tile for roofing. This enduring type of roof was recommended by the architect as an important feature for the model residence. Experts of B. Mifflin Hood Brick company, from which all tile used in this undertaking was obtained, made a careful survey of the plans and consulted with the architect on these phases.

Experts in all lines of tiling, B. Mifflin Hood Brick company are constructing an arabesque tile driveway that curves in front of the model house, ascending the rapid slope of the site to the porte-cochere on the inward side of the corner dwelling. You remarked how this would enhance the beauty of the residence as you stepped closer to watch the work. You can visualize the striking harmony of tile work that will result when roof, steps, porch and driveway are all completed.

Electric Fixtures Installed.
While still traversing the grounds of The Constitution model home you noticed that the graders had practically completed their task. You were told that by the first of the coming week you could see the expert planters of Siron Nurseries, Inc., leading plant cultivators, start the work of landscaping. It will be interesting to observe this feature as it progresses. The planting will be supervised by Andrew Aulen, well-known landscape architect, who prepared the plan of the model house, and the rapid pace of the work which is in charge of the work and is supervising the planters.

The shrieking of the floor-scrappers had ceased, so you stepped into the house to see the latest additions to the interior decoration. You were overjoyed to see that finally the electric fixtures were being attached. When selection of the fixtures was being made at the Capital Electric company, you recall how eager you were to see how the exquisite pieces would look when fitted into the model home. ALLEGED BIGAMIST
Emanuel County Man Held at Forsyth.

Juliette, Ga., February 11.—Walter Mooney, formerly of Swainsboro, has been placed in the county jail at Forsyth on a charge of bigamy. It is alleged that last November he married Miss Bessie Britt, member of a prominent Monroe county family after deserting a wife in Swainsboro. The arrest of Mooney followed a letter to county officers from his wife in Swainsboro, in which it was stated that Mooney sent to Forsyth with the purpose of seeking employment and that although he promised to return to Swainsboro in December she had heard nothing further from him since.

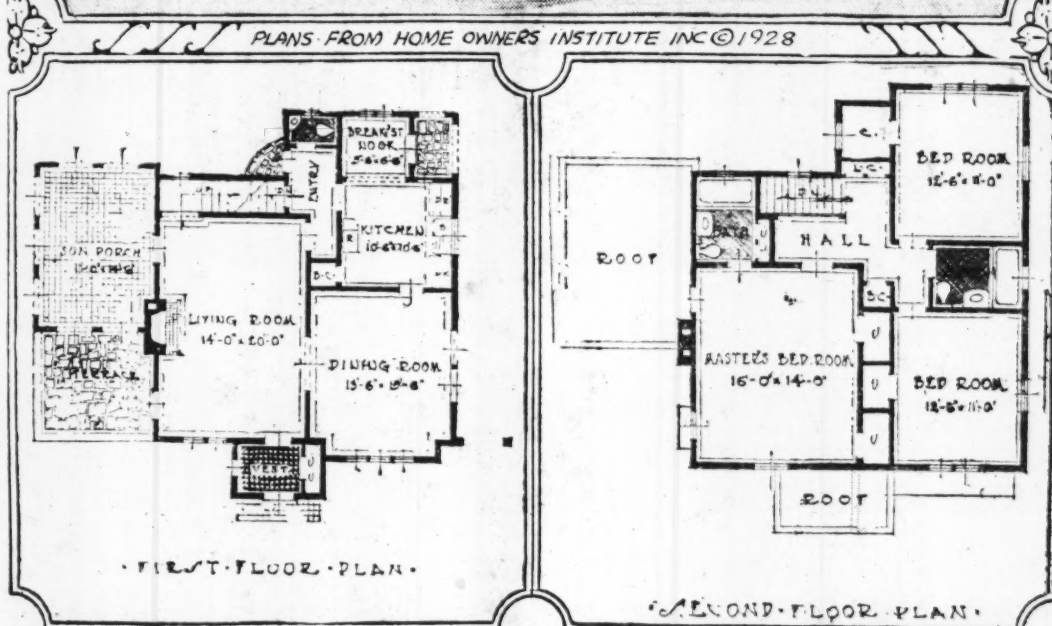

Mooney and his wife are said to be members of prominent families of Emanuel county, according to information received by Forsyth officers from the Swainsboro police. Mooney will be tried at the February term of Monroe county superior court.

If weather is favorable for the production of pimento, the cannery expects to have one of its busiest and most successful seasons. The 1927 season was the best year in the history of the industry in Butts county, many growers receiving net returns of more than $100 per acre.

Pimento pepper has been established as a safe and dependable crop in this section. The crop is highly specialized and as long as it is confined to a small area will continue to prove profitable. It is said that the acreage in pimento peppers, fruits and vegetables in this section will be the largest in history as farmers are contracting to grow these in large quantities for the Jackson and other canneries.

Harmony of Spanish Exterior Gives Graceful Air to House

Even Ordinary Features of This House Are Made To Serve Decorative Ends; Complete Plumbing Provision Is Noteworthy.

BY L. PORTER MOORE
President, Home Owners' Institute, Inc.

Suitability of materials and skill in adapting native materials to the requirements of architecture of foreign derivation are probably the paramount requisites of good design today, since so large a proportion of our new homes are of European style. The plan shown today as No. 296-S illustrates these qualities in an interesting manner, its designer having evolved from distinctly American materials a plan having the distinction and grace of the homes of Spain, at a price of convenience and economy.

It contains 23,000 cubic feet. The architect is Harold E. Paddon, of New York, registered architect in New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania and California.

His design is noteworthy in its use of the features common to all houses for decorative purposes. Thus the chimney of common brick is covered with stucco which reveals the brick-work in interesting pattern at the top. A wrought iron ornament decorates one side in graceful relief. Windows are skillfully treated so that they break up the expanse of walls into predetermined pattern. A gate for the garage driveway lengthens out the apparent lines of the house and mounts a wrought iron lantern on its masonry anchorage pier.

Scattered about the exterior are bits of wrought iron, spots of brick-work and tiles, leaded glass and concrete ornaments which in the totality of their effect considerably enhance the distinction of the house. The rain-pipes, of non-corroding copper, are embellished with decorative conductor heads. The utilization of utilitarian features for decorative ends is a pronounced characteristic of this design, which, in this respect, could easily be simplified.

Adequate Plumbing Conveniences.
The downstairs layout permits the large dining room to share in the radiance of the fireplace which is placed opposite the opening between living and dining rooms, the opening enhancing the scene of spaciousness in both rooms. A downstairs lavatory and two upstairs baths give that modern convenience which only an adequate provision of modern plumbing equipment can afford. A large breakfast nook and entrance vestibule, front and rear porches and a terrace which are out-of-door rooms in themselves, are supplementary rooms of large value.

Refinements which could easily be installed in this home include the automatic heat regulator, the built-in, chimney-fed incinerator, the automatic electric refrigerator, concrete porch and terrace floors of concrete scored off and colored to represent flagging, and complete laundry equipment in the modern lavatory.

The construction of the house is intended to be that of conventional wood framing, covered with Portland cement stucco on galvanized metal lath.

An outstanding feature of the new concern will be its apartment management division. The Thomas company is already operating seven apartment buildings, containing a total of 120 units. Disclosing the fact that these are kept 98 per cent rented, Mr. Thomas pointed to the infinite possibilities of this field when service is made the keynote of managing the apartments.

In addition to the number of apartments handled by Thomas will soon be made with completion of the large residential structures being built at 2230 Peachtree road by Wagar & Co., it will contain 22 units.

Other divisions of the E. P. Thomas Realty company are being expanded steadily.

Thomas Opens New Realty Firm Under Own Name

Organization of the E. P. Thomas Realty company by E. P. Thomas, popular rising business man and wide-ranging local real estate circles, was formally announced Saturday. The company, specializing in apartment management, real estate sales, general insurance and loans, is operating with a suite of offices in the Norris building.

Mr. Thomas has been active in the real estate business here for seven years, being connected with some of the city's largest organizations in this field. In opening the new office for himself he visualizes the steadily increasing opportunities of the field in Atlanta resulting from the city's growth and future outlook of prosperity.

Mr. Thomas was formerly with Adams-Cates company and with the Adair company some time before its reorganization. More recently he was executive of the Union Realty company.

An outstanding feature of the new concern will be its apartment management division. The Thomas company is already operating seven apartment buildings, containing a total of 120 units. Disclosing the fact that these are kept 98 per cent rented, Mr. Thomas pointed to the infinite possibilities of this field when service is made the keynote of managing the apartments.

Full Equipment Gives High Utility To Home Garage

The increasing motor-mindedness of the American home owner is reflected in the tendency toward providing well equipped home garages, accommodating two or more cars and well equipped for that care in maintenance which so greatly enhances the utility and pleasure to be derived from the family machines. Good heating and lighting equipment and efficient garage door hardware simplify the matter of looking after the periodic cleaning, lubrication and adjustments which all cars require.

In planning the garage it is always well to allow space for two machines, although only one may be owned at the time. The garage should be large enough later find that they require a second car for "utility" work, and even if this is not the case the extra space proves valuable for storage, or may be a source of revenue.

Heating may be accomplished by either an extension of the house heating plant or a separate garage heater, using coal or electricity. Most provision against fire being a requisite. Protection for the car does not require that house temperatures be maintained against cooling drafts, although heat be kept on to prevent freezing and the coagulation of oil and grease.

Lighting is an important matter easily doubling the convenience of the garage if properly done. An outside light over the door should be controlled by a convenient switch. A switch inside the door should control radiators placed over the motors of the cars, while other lights should give illumination of special intensity over the work bench. Another switch should control lighting of the basement whatever door one enters the house by after leaving the garage at night.

A twin convenience outlet at the work bench will give power for soldering iron, electric motor, vulcanizer, battery charger, glue pot and whatever other electric maintenance facilities may be required.

Many types of garage door hardware are available. The type which permits of the doors sliding and rolling inside eliminates trouble with snow drifting against ordinary swing doors. The overhead type of door also eliminates this real inconvenience. Doors should always fit snugly, particularly when the garage is located in the basement of the home. Circulation of air in the garage in this case will mean that heat will be taken from the garage, at the expense of all the rooms in the house.

HOLLOWAY TO SPEAK AT SPALDING DINNER

Griffin, Ga., February 11.—(Special.)—James A. Holloway, associate editor of The Atlanta Constitution, and the keynote speaker at the recent Spaulding dinner, will be the principal speaker at the Spaulding county products dinner to be held here next Tuesday night.

Mr. Holloway is probably the best-known man in the state in facts about Georgia, supporting his knowledge with an unusual ability as a public speaker; encouraging an interesting message to the many who attend the dinner.

The menu to be served will consist exclusively of Spaulding county products. Miss M. Price, of the Little Pine Dining Room, is planning to make a unique and representative menu.

Reservations for the dinner have been pouring in and it is believed all of the 150 places provided will be spoken for before Saturday night. The Exchange club, of Griffin, has voted to suspend its weekly meeting next Tuesday and attend the dinner in a body. The Rotary club has sent out notices to all members urging their attendance but will not call off its members.

A feature of the dinner will be the presentation of The News "Leading Citizen Cup" to John H. Cheatham, of this city. Mr. Cheatham has been declared the "leading citizen 1927" by a committee of representative citizens. The presentation speech will be made by Judge W. H. Conner.

Metal Vault Protects Clothes From Moths

Acting as a death chamber for moth life and as a dust-proof cabinet for clothing in daily use, a new clothes vault fulfills two functions. It serves the double purpose of thrift and luxurious convenience.

Because of being proof against dust, dampness, moths, thieves and fire, the vault fills unusual, long-felt wants. It prevents sickness and disease because dust-entraps are 99 per cent effective in the gas-tight container.

Clothes Dryer Timely Help.

At this time of the year, when freezing and bad weather often prevent clothes from drying for days on end, the convenience of the gas-fired clothes dryer is appreciated. Clothes are placed in the dryer as they come from the tub, the proper temperature for quick and safe drying being automatically maintained.

TRIPLER ELEPHANT GAME

YOUR CHANCE TO WIN $1,500.00

THE PROBLEM

The sums total of the figures on each of the three elephants pictured herewith are to be given as a solution. You can find the sum total of each elephant by adding up the figures of each. The figures 1, 2, and 3 in the circles in the upper left hand corners of the elephants are simply to identify them. These figures have nothing to do with the elephants' weights.

In submitting your solution you must identify the three elephants by their numbers and give the weights of each. A complete solution means that you are to find the sum total of each elephant. It takes the sum total of each to make one solution. This is a game of skill and not a guessing contest.

There are no "1's" or "ciphers" in the elephants. There are no groups of figures, that is, the figure "9" is the highest figure shown. There are no "23's," "55's" or "97's," or like groups. If you find a "2" and a "3" are written so closely together that it looks like "23," it means that "2" and "3" are to be added—just as you would if they were an inch apart.

There are no figures in the picture except in the bodies of the elephants. The tops of the "6's" are distinctly curved, and the bottom of the "9's" are straight or nearly so. There is no trick or illusion in the charts.

GENERAL RULES OF THE CONTEST

1. This contest is open only to residents of Georgia and adjoining states. Both old and new subscribers may enter. No employee or member of an employee's family of The Atlanta Constitution will be allowed to participate in the contest, nor any of the prize winners that have won prizes in excess of $100.00 in any of the elephant contests heretofore conducted by The Atlanta Constitution.

2. Contestants may submit as many different solutions as they may desire, provided a payment of one of the amounts designated in the prize list shall accompany each solution, but no contestant will be permitted to win more than one prize. Once registered a solution cannot be changed. NO SOLUTION UNACCOMPANIED BY A SUBSCRIPTION PAYMENT WILL BE REGISTERED.

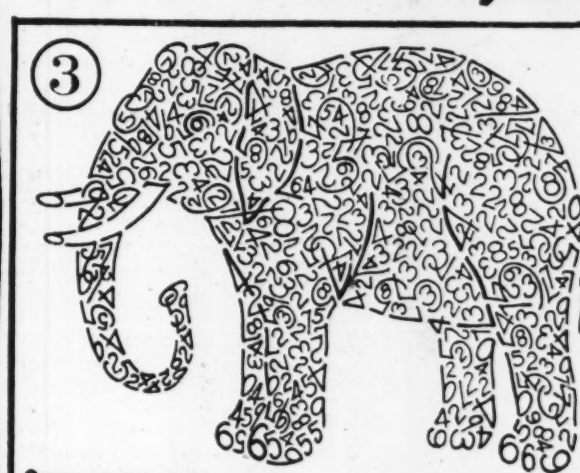

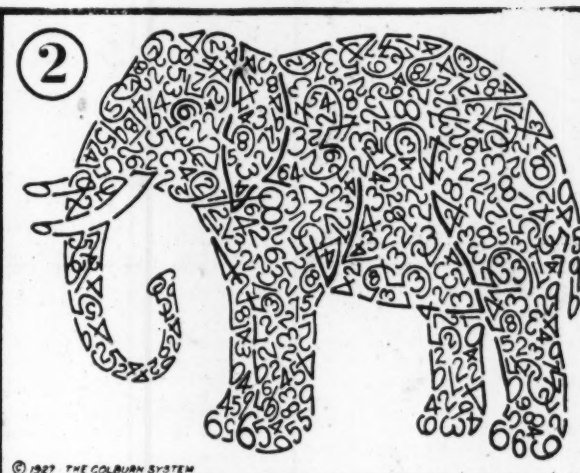

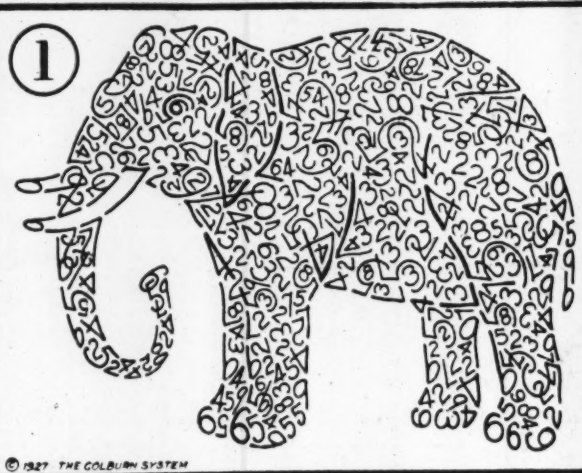

3. The Atlanta Constitution offers these prizes for individual effort. While it is proper for members of one household or several friends to work together, it is not permissible for more than one of those working in unison to send a solution of the puzzle. When, in the judgment of the contest manager or The Atlanta Constitution, more than one member of the same family or more than one of any number of persons he believes have worked together, send in a solution of the puzzle, the right is reserved to refund the amount of money paid for subscription and return the solution if it is believed has been submitted contrary to the rules.

4. The Atlanta Constitution reserves the right at any time to reject any solution which it believes has not been submitted under the proper conditions. In other words, any group of persons working together and submitting more than one solution, all submitted by the group will be barred. The Atlanta Constitution also reserves the right to finally decide any other questions or points which may arise in this contest, and participants by sending in their answers agree to accept the decisions of the contest manager of The Atlanta Constitution as conclusive and final.

5. In case of ties, as many prizes will be reserved as there are people tied before any prizes are awarded for a less correct solution; that is, if two or more people should tie in the best solution, the first two or more prizes will be reserved for them, and they will be awarded in order of the standing of their solutions of the second puzzle. That is, the best solution will be awarded the first prize, the next best second, and the third best third prize, etc.

6. All solutions with remittances must be delivered to the office of The Atlanta Constitution by 6:00 p.m., Thursday, March 29, 1928, or mailed at any post office in Georgia or adjoining states, bearing postmark of no later date than March 29.

7. The subscription rate of the daily and Sunday Constitution is $5.00 for six months, $9.50 for twelve months. All subscriptions in this contest must be paid in advance. Nothing less than six months' subscription will be accepted, and not more than twelve months' subscription is required. A subscription can be sent to one person and the solution credited to another, but the complete address of both must be given in each instance. This contest begins Thursday, February 9, and ends Thursday, March 29, 1928.

Important Facts To Remember

While the amount you pay with a solution of the puzzle does not have any effect on your winning an award, it does affect the amount you will receive should you win, as the value of these awards is determined by what the winners submit in subscription money. This is explained in the awards list, which you should study carefully before sending in your solution. The time a solution is received has no bearing upon its winning an award. Accuracy is what counts. Not more than one award will be awarded to any one person.

Closing Date

Will Close Thursday,

Mrs. J. M. Patterson Gives Talk Before Second District

Mrs. J. M. Patterson, chairman of good roads and highways in attendance at the second district meeting in Thomasville Tuesday, January 21, gave a short talk on the present road situation and the encouraging and interesting plans for the future. Mrs. Patterson is duly appreciative of the cooperation of the state highway board of Georgia in giving all the information on road conditions from time to time. She said:

"Prior to 1927 there had been completed on the state aid system, 623.72 miles. This means hard surfacing of our highways and this paving was divided among 54 counties in the state. It was not until 1927 that the state highway board had sufficient funds to put on a very comprehensive program of paving. It is interesting to know that during the year 1927 590 miles of paved highways were completed. We are informed that there will be paved on the state aid system in 1928 about 600 miles of highways and during each subsequent year for the years 1929 and 1930 at least this amount of paving each year. We are assured that within five years there will be paved on the state aid system in Georgia not less than 4,000 miles. We are also informed that in 1928 there will be constructed at least four great paved highways stretching from one border of the state to the other.

"The above facts coming from the chairman of our state highway board are certainly most encouraging and we feel that Georgia is at last coming into her own and we, as club women, must begin to plan to do our share or our part of the work which is beautifying these highways as fast as they are completed. In counties where your roads are completed I trust you will begin at once a very definite plan of beautification. Trees can be planted this year, if planted at once and soon flower seeds can be scattered along the completed highways. While very few counties will be able to do the beautiful and lasting planting and marking that is to be found in Bibb county in their 'Road of Remembrance,' still there is much that can be done with comparatively little cost and the permanent markings and plantings can be done whenever your club is financially able to do it. In my own county, Dougherty, we are fortunate in having miles of Magnolia trees already planted by private parties and it is our plan to eventually plant Magnolias the full length of our county on the Dixie Highway. In the meantime, we are planting dogwood and crepe myrtle, and we will inter-plant these with Magnolias later on. Of course you must realize that until your highway is completed, any permanent planting will be a waste of time and money.

"Our district chairman of roads and highways for the state are appointing their division chairman and information and suggestions for improving the highways will soon be sent them."

Things New and Old About the Bible By W. P. KING

Pastor First Methodist Church, Athens, Ga.

Religion—Social and Scientific.

CHRISTIANITY and Social Adventuring. Edited by Jerome Davis. The Century Co., New York city. Price $2.50.

Never was Christianity so vital and so great a power in the world. We have forgotten the words' fundamentalism and modernism which were filling the air a few months ago. Professor Davis has brought together the views of some of the alert men and women of the country in an endeavor to bring home to all Christians the fact that the churches must take an active part in local efforts to meet social needs if they are to hold their influence—William E. Borah, Graham Taylor, Harry Emerson Fosdick, Miriam Van Waters, Wayne B. Wheeler, Richard C. Cabot and others of equal prominence in their chosen fields. The average person who really wishes to make his life pattern square with his faith pattern will find here a whole arsenal of ideas. There are concrete suggestions for securing cooperation between church members and social agencies, discussion of pacifism, immigration, prohibition, corporal punishment, and a dozen other live questions. The authors do not pretend to answer them categorically, but each one makes a sincere effort to contribute toward understanding between the church, religion, the individual citizen and social work.

"The church, as the inspirer of religion must act as a powerful Transformer, changing its current from mystical abstractions to applied dynamics."

The first chapter is on "Civic Righteousness," by William E. Borah, and there follows "Practising the Sermon on the Mount" by Harry Emerson Fosdick. The third chapter is "The Church and the Social Question," by Bishop Francis J. McConnell. These three chapters are worth more than the price of the book.

Other well known writers discuss a variety of themes, "The Church and Social Agencies," "How the Catholic Church Does It," "Child Deendancy," "Juvenile Delinquency," "Health," "Social Hygiene," "Mental Hygiene," "Law Enforcement," "The Church and Education," "The Church and Industry," "The Immigrant," and "The Local Jail."

God and the Golden Rule, by Joseph Fort Newton. The Century Co., New York city. Price $2.00.

Dr. Joseph Newton is well known in this country and in England as one of the great liberal ministers of the age. Born in Texas, he was educated there and at Harvard, and within a very few years after graduation was widely known for his sermons, lectures and magazine articles. In 1916 he was called to London to fill the pulpit of City Temple, "The Cathedral of Free Churches." For four years, during the worst of the world war, and for more than a year afterward he held that historic church, going to and fro over England, Scotland and Wales as an ambassador of goodwill, interpreting the spirit and thought of America to the people of Great Britain. His pen was also busy seeking to promote goodwill and understanding between England and America, as a basis of world order and abiding peace.

He is the author of several books, among them, Diary of Preaching in London, and Diary of Preaching in New York, both of which appeared serially in the Atlantic Monthly. He is editor of the annual book of Best Sermons, and of The Master Mason. He also conducts a department in McCall's Magazine called The Best Sermon of the Month. Besides all this he holds the historic pulpit of St. Paul's Memorial church at Overbrook, Philadelphia, and is in demand from coast to coast as a speaker to college and university students.

He says of the articles in this volume: "They were born of a busy ministry, in the midst of human need and yearning . . . they have many titles but only one theme, the Life of God in the Soul."

One can hardly find more stimulating introductions to the study of the Sermon on the Mount than Dr. Newton's sermon on "God and the Golden Rule," taken in connection with Dr. Fosdick's discussion in the preceding volume.

There are other striking sermon topics such as "Yes," "Believing Unbelief," "Unknown Words of Jesus," "What Is a Religious Man?" "Living Under Pressure," "Living With Ourselves," and "The Great Game."

Preachers as well as laymen will find in this volume of sermons the best contribution of one of our greatest preachers.

Reality in Religion, by Dr. Gilbert T. Rowe. Cokesbury Press, Nashville, Tenn. Price $1.75.

This volume contains "The Quilian Lectures" delivered by the author at Emory university. There is no volume of recent publication which is more pertinent to the pressing problems of our day. It is of distinct apologetic value. And it possesses this value because it boldly discards certain untenable tenets of traditionalism, and directs the church in the way of sanity and safety. There will be extremists who will consider certain propositions of the author as perilous to the faith. It may be said to any who may violently disagree with the author, "If you don't like it, answer it."

A friendly critic has objected to the elaborate quotations of Dr. Rowe, and has suggested that the forceful reasoning of the author did not need to be supplemented. I am sure however that on account of nature of the discussion and the difficult problems that are faced, it is far more convincing to have the corroboration of four distinguished writers, representing four different churches. Dr. James W. Lee is a Methodist, Dr. Douglas Clyde MacIntosh is a Presbyterian, Dr. Henry Nelson Wieman is a Presbyterian, and Canon Burnett Hillman Streeter is an Episcopalian. The extract from Dr. Lee's book, "The Religion of Science" will be interest to southern Methodists and especially Georgians. It is now evident that Dr. Lee was a pioneer and blazed the trail in which an increasing company is walking.

The author quotes him in a sentence which expresses the real issue. "And whatever truth there is in God or in man, or in religion or in the universe that can be verified in experience and objectified in life or in human affairs is scientific truth."

While Dr. Rowe has set forth the position of distinguished authorities, the best part of the volume is his own illuminating interpretation. The reader may form some idea of the range of the discussion from the chapter topics: "The Nature of Religion," "Symbols in Religion," "Scientific Religion," "The Scientific Method in Religion," "The Power of Religion," and "Finality in Religion."

Broadway Banter

—By—
FORNEY WYLY

THE STRANGE Interlude" Eugene O'Neill's play with its nine full-length acts has at last reached production on Broadway. This is the play whose excessive length necessitates its being given in broken doses. You reach the theater at five-fifteen in the afternoon, where you see the first half of it until seven-thirty. You are given an hour off for dinner after which you return for the rest, getting out somewhere in the neighborhood of eleven.

You would be amazed to find how quickly you overlook getting tired. I had an idea there was no play at which I wouldn't fidget after three or four hours even if Beatrice Lillie were in it. However, this "Strange Interlude," the best and most profound of the O'Neill plays so absorbed and engrossed me that it seemed no longer than the regulation two and a half hour play.

Lynn Fontanne and Glenn Anders head a cast which more than brings the various characters to life. Miss Fontanne's part is that of a woman frustrated in love at every turn. Take an afternoon and an evening off and attend "The Strange Interlude" if perchance you want to see something really worth-while in our theater.

And now it's Ward Morehouse, formerly of your city, who has up and written a play. In fact his first effort, "Gentlemen of the Press," has gone so far as to get itself bought, and at this writing is in the throes of its first rehearsals. Mr. Morehouse dilly-dallied around on one of your afternoon papers some years past without causing any particular ripples in the newspaper world. The same cannot be said of his activities during the past year. For The Sun here, Mr. Morehouse has been conducting about the most readable and popular column of Broadway Theatrical Chit-Chat in town. It is through his daily notes that you learn—rather breathlessly—where Jane Cowl unpacked her lunch-pail the day before. Or perhaps you sleep better that evening simply because through Mr. Morehouse you have learned Lenore Ulrich that very day hailed a cab in front of the Ritz at 11:17—not 11:18, mind you, but 11:17. It is so nice to know these things.

There has always been the contention that an authentic and accurate play about newspaper life has never been written. Certainly Mr. Morehouse, who seemingly came off a printing press himself, should be in full possession of what goes on in a newspaper office. I've a faint suspicion this first bit of Morehouse drama will be a hit. It is further whispered about that a line here and there in the play was written by no less a busy-bee playwright than Jack Cohen, Jr.

"Lovely Lady" is the rollicking musical comedy in which Edna Leedom is the featured player. This is the same Miss Leedom who in past Ziegfeld Follies would come out at, say, 9:20 and again at a quarter to eleven to do a few songs. There is small doubt that on each occasion she held in her hands a willowy feather-fan. The Shuberts evidently decided that a little more of Miss Leedom might not be amiss so they put her in a full-length musical comedy. The result is entirely satisfactory to me.

"Lovely Lady" has a tune called "Lovely Lady," which is fine for dance-floor use. It further has that something about it which will make it sound great even when it filters through that palm you two are sitting behind during the dance she said she'd sit out with you. The rest of the music score is far above the average non-hit numbers encountered in most musical shows.

Miss Leedom has an easy-going and care-free way of putting over her material which makes her likeable. She is furthermore one comedienne who doesn't imitate Beatrice Lillie, but who, quaintly enough, does her stuff in her own way. "Lovely Lady" is taken from a French farce called "Breakfast in the Sun," so that should assure you bedroom mix-ups abound in plenty.

"We Never Learn" is the somewhat meaningless title they've given the play at the Eltinge. It seems to me the title might quite aptly apply to the audience, for "We Never Learn" to stop attending these so-so plays.

Though I suppose "We Never Learn" isn't altogether terrible. It does have an original if preposterous plot. Here we have a lawyer defending a man accused of committing the very murder the lawyer himself committed. It is excellently acted by Elizabeth Risdon, as the wife, and Estelle Winwood, as the other woman. It is badly acted by Charles Waldron, as the lawyer-husband-murderer. This is the same Mr. Waldron who was so good as "Craig," in "Craig's Wife," and it looks as though she would have made him give a neater and more well-ordered performance than his apparently effortful one in "We Never Learn."

As for Estelle Winwood—well, if you must know, boys and girls, I think this Miss Winwood is a pretty swell actress.

There's a story going the rounds regarding a brunette beauty in one of the musical hits that I think is pretty funny. It seems when the show she's in was trying out in Atlantic City she met an elderly man who liked her intensely and immediately. During the first stroll they took down the Boardwalk he casually purchased three fur-coats for her, one jaunty ermine, another squirrel, and a third little chinchilla model, to play in the sand in, I suppose. These trinkets she had sent to her hotel, promising her new friend she'd have lunch with him the next day. Soon after lunch she showed up at rehearsal in a rage. "Do you know," she protested indignantly, "that man who gave me the fur coats dared to offer me a Rolls-Royce today? Why, I couldn't accept a car—really, I don't want to be under obligations to him! !"

Miss Varick's Husbands

By Arthur T. Munyan

Intrigue and Gossip Were the Main Diversions of the Queenstown Colonists, and Moira Varick, with Her Little Hobby of Husband-Collecting, Kept the Tongues Wagging.

THE story is of Queenstown with its poisonous gayeties, and of Dorothy Haviland, with that lovely oddity of hers. I merely appear now and then to tell the thing as it happened.

Thinking of London one thinks of fog and romance, or, thinking of New York, of lights and extravagant joys. In much the same way, but more sharply, any one who remembers the Queenstown station thinks of heat and intrigue.

The heat was the curse of the place and intrigue was the main diversion. It was bound to be so. The women had nothing else to amuse them, and the men, officers and civilians alike, had only their work, which was of a boring and ignominious sort. Of course, there was snobbery and a pretense of society, but that was canvas for the real picture. Intrigue was all that made living possible to people stifled by the dullness of the post and fed up everlastingly. Heat, boredom, gossip, intrigue.

Every afternoon people met on the terrace of the casino to talk and sip iced drinks. There they smilingly tore to pieces the reputation of any absent person, or of any person who left the group. It was an idle pastime. It never stopped flirtations; it simply gave them the added zest of secrecy and risk. So Queenstown lived on whispers and juleps, stolen kisses, and moonlit promises in a semi-tropical enervation, and nothing much ever came of anything there.

The raciest topic under the palmettos was Moira Varick. People pretended to be indignant about her, because it looked better, but secretly, I think, they were grateful to Moira. She put on a good show and gave them something to talk about—and guess about.

"I like husbands," she said openly, "as long as they're animals of prey. I shouldn't, of course, care to own one, a caged and domesticated one."

Other women's husbands, she was frank to say, fascinated her. They were urbane, experienced—whatever that meant. And appreciative.

"Bachelors, no," she said. "They're like medieval ladies—haunted by the idea that they're pursued. Much too shy and silly to be worth any sane woman's attention."

She seemed to be telling the truth, though nobody could believe that Moira (or any one else at Queenstown) would do that. What was her game, then? Well, that was what people talked about. Meanwhile, Moira lived up to herself. She coolly collected one husband after another, on with a new love almost before she was off with the old. Lieutenant Haviland was her fourth husband.

Dickie Haviland had wings, and women liked him. He was a flying officer and the government, with some notion of equity, gave him double pay for his rank as long as he evaded death. His life was not in any great peril because there wasn't any plane at the station for Dickie to fly in. But he took this danger bonus cheerfully.

In fact, he made a kind of happy philosophy of the idea. Double pay; double everything. Double cocktails.

lows of gossip, and went about as little as she could.

The station swore Dickie was mad to neglect Dorothy and pursue Moira. Every afternoon Captain Sterling's wife, a meddlesome old cat, would start the ball rolling by snorting that Dorothy ought to be told.

"Perhaps," I ventured, "she knows." That was a record in understatement. If Dorothy had been spared any whisper, or innuendo, or pitying smile, it was an oversight.

"Then," said Mrs. Sterling crushingly, "she certainly ought to be told."

"Well . . . Told what?" I asked her maliciously, and there I had her.

Told what. Dickie's infatuation was plain enough. That was nothing to tell. And beyond that nobody knew anything. Moira had her own clever little way of leading the gossips on just so far and then throwing them back on their own imaginations.

"Seems sort of foolish," he told her, "not to know the name of the loveliest woman in Queenstown."

Dance all night. Dorothy for a wife; Moira for a playmate. Eat, drink, and be merry today; also tomorrow.

Moira was not really beautiful. She was unbelievably smart, with just that elegance of line that is so startling in a thoroughbred wolfhound. Her dark brown eyes held overtones of gray and a peculiar wisdom, and were placed at so wide an interval that they seemed inscrutable. To the sight she was always a little unreal. Men imagined she was unlike all other women—and then tried desperately to find out to what extent she was not.

But Dorothy Haviland, the daredevil Dickie's wife, was a lovely and perfect creature. The seams of her chiffon stockings were straight, parallel, vertical lines. Her eyes were a luminous gray, alternately shy and unflinching under deep lashes that had the slow sweep and eloquence of a feather fan. And Dorothy, as I happen to know, had courage and constancy. She hated Queenstown with a deep sincerity, kept out of the way of things went on. Dickie danced his wild attendance on Moira. Dorothy kept a sweet reserve, refused even to try to chain up the errant Dickie, and declined to discuss herself with others. She didn't even reproach Dickie, and was something of a puzzle herself.

Some clever soul got the idea that perhaps Dorothy was running a very sub rosa affair of her own. The idea was so idiotic that it had to be dropped—with a sigh of regret.

In August Lieutenant Jimmy Sparrow came to Queenstown to make a fourth in the pretty sextet. Jimmy had wings, too, and was a brother officer of Dickie's. He brought a plane with him. Every one waited with interest to see what part he would play.

Anywhere else a charming new officer would have paired with Moira, the station's most attractive unmarried girl. But such matters were managed differently at Queenstown. A pretty romance between Moira and Jimmy was as unthinkable at Queenstown as—. Well, it was just too tame, too absurd. All reasonable people felt that Jimmy would make love to Dorothy Haviland. That was a twist so simple and neat that it was almost conventional.

There was Sparrow, an attractive kid with the deadliest kind of appeal for women. He had the air of a little boy just scrubbed and dragged away from home too young. He roused treacherous maternal instincts in all women. They never could realize he was over 14 until it was too late. How would Dorothy be able to resist him? There she was, just needing a little admiration to go the way of all Queenstown. It wasn't reasonable to look for anything but a Dorothy-Jimmy complication.

I had my doubts. As the one person who hated the station as cordially as Dorothy, I understood her a little and admired her a lot. And I knew that it was unreasonable to expect anything reasonable to happen here.

Jimmy Sparrow, as I had half anticipated, did the other thing. Before he had been a member of our colony for twenty minutes he had seen Moira and he was hers. People thought it depraved of him. His move was an insult to Dorothy, an outrage upon Dickie, and an imposition upon Moira herself. A bachelor snubbing a perfectly eligible married woman and dashing off after an unmarried girl! And of all girls, Moira, who had Dickie's allegiance! It was disgraceful!

Thus Jimmy Sparrow slipped unerringly into the hearts of Queenstown.

On the night of the Embassy club ball there was a familiar scene at the Havilands'. Of course, I was not there. I can merely construct what happened out of what I know.

Dickie, very brave to look upon in his dress whites, stood behind his wife's chair with perfect courtesy and made a proper remark before sitting down to dinner.

"You don't care to go tonight, dear?"

Dorothy imperceptibly lifted pale shoulders. "Is it official?"

"O, no. Nothing obligatory. I just thought—"

She considered. "Why don't you ask Moira Varick if she won't—?" She intended no irony. They were talking polite set lines.

"Why, I said something to Moira about possibly dropping around her way tonight—"

"Yes, do!" That done, Dorothy glanced at her husband over the rim of her glass. "Anything wrong with the cocktail, dear?"

"Something awfully right!" He was very handsome as he gazed at the opalescence in his glass, his head held high by the close collar of his tunic.

"I hate Queenstown!" Dorothy said suddenly. Her eyes, always so expressive, in that instant had the wild light of a hunted dryad's.

"Why?" Dickie asked. Vehemence rather than the statement itself surprised him.

"O—" Now the long lashes swept down, veiling emotion. "The heat—" Outside the wide windows the faint breeze made a hot, dry rustle.

"Yes, damnable," he agreed indifferently. It was not worth one's breath to curse the heat here.

"They'll dance late?"

"I suppose. Don't wait up for me."

After he had gone whirling down the drive in the gray roadster Dorothy was pensive. Presently she spoke aloud to herself after a habit that had come upon her at the station.

"I presume it's my own fault. If I would try to intrigue him— If I would scheme—it's the only way in this dreadful place."

Then she made a gesture of repugnance at the thought and went to play halfheartedly on the only piano in Queenstown. To one who had studied the heart of Dorothy Haviland it would have seemed likely that she loved the charming infidel who had gone blithely off to his rendezvous.

The Embassy club was a hot, scented shell of a building under the palmettos, with a polished floor that rolled in the heat, and French windows pouring out the service hand's languid, bad jazz. On the verandas sat mammas, chaperons, wives of senior officers, who fanned themselves and talked and whispered. Servants went to and fro, and only the tinkle of ice on glass marked their movements. White uniforms, the silk suits of civilians, the pastel evening frocks of women dotted the terraces or floated on the heated waves of music. Silver slippers shimmered on the blinding polished wax. Laughter was muffled.

The faces of the women were smiling, hectic, with restive eyes that saw desperately. Dancers watched each other. No single circumstance was missed by the avid line of eyes on the veranda. Every one at the station was present or accounted for. The number of times each frock had been worn was checked. Who arrived with whom, who danced with whom and how often were noted. Every forced gaiety, every sign of the extra cocktail, every disappearance of a couple from the dance floor was remarked. The gossip gibbered endlessly.

Every molehill was talked into a mountain. And now a tense whisper ran across the floor, the verandas, and the terraces. Where were Moira Varick and Dickie Haviland? Together, naturally, yes! But where?

Would they have the daring not to appear? Would they risk the scandal that would follow their running off somewhere together on the night of the Embassy club dance? No, hardly. A mishap, then? No, Moira never had mishaps.

All minds, buzzing with guesses, knowing Moira's ways, came to one conclusion. She was delaying her arrival for the purpose of making an entrance. Perhaps she had a new gown from Paris or New York and wanted to display it with the fullest effect. It was certain that she had something to spring.

I talked to Mrs. Sterling and heard a sidecar motorcycle pass the gates, the snarl of the engine hanging and fading on the heavy air. I wondered idly for a moment who it was. A tension like the brazen monotony of the music and the stifling in the air pervaded the club, while glances were turned often toward the entrance gate.

To relieve suspense Mrs. Sterling talked to me, whom she hated, about an escadrille at Queenstown.

"They tell me the planes actually have arrived!"

"Yes, it has," I said. The planes consisted of one ruinous old pursuit plane, a DH-4, I think, or about that vintage.

Other people stood around and joined in the talk. "Dickie and Sparrow had it up yesterday," said some one. "By the way, where is Sparrow tonight? O, Dickie said they were 'flying it in formation.' Wasn't that cute of him?"

"—no discipline in the air forces."

"Does Haviland remember how to fly a ship? It's been long enough since—!"

"What if the poor child should crash?"

"Then the commandant would send his insignia to Moira."

"And notify Dorothy! Otherwise she might night know of it for weeks! Dickie and his wife never meet, I'm told."

"You ghouls!" I said, and laughed disagreeably. I was a civilian, and an unmannered animal, anyhow, rude to people's faces and civil about them behind their backs. I was not the vogue at Queenstown.

There was a sudden hush on the ballroom, followed by a muffled commotion of nervous voices and movements. The hush spread from the dance floor in a big, widening circle. In an orchestral effect of scraping chairs a murmur rose to a gasp of astonishment.

"Fan-cy her dar-ing to!"

"O, this is too much!"

I stared at the gibbering throng around me and saw from their faces that some priceless piece of scandal had just come off. Then I stuck my face in at one of the ballroom windows. Moira Varick was arriving with none other than Jimmy Sparrow!

"Well, what of it?" I demanded.

Nobody answered such a simpleton's question, and I grinned to myself.

In all her arrogance and chic Moira stood with her escort on the wide stair to the ballroom, talking lightly with him, coolly glancing about her. Her face, with its odd planes, was as unreadable as ever except for the trace of a mocking smile on her lips. In the poise she showed she might have been unaware of the sensation she was causing.

Lieutenant Jimmy, charming in his silver winged tunic, plainly was proud of his partner, boyishly curious about his debut, quite innocent of what went on. Some of the men present may have been stupid in seeing what had happened.

But Moira and every woman there knew just what her arrival with Jimmy Sparrow meant. It meant that she had discarded Dickie Haviland, and on the same caprice had captured the station's newest darling. It meant that all present were to see for themselves, think what they liked, say what they pleased, and the devil to them all! Moira danced, while tongues ran wild.

I spoke to Mrs. Sterling because I always got some ironic amusement out of her sputterings. "Now what?" I inquired.

"It's outrageous!" she puffed, to my delight. Everything to her was an outrage. It was outrageous for an affair to go on, and outrageous for it to end.

"Do you really think so, Mrs. Sterling?" I egged her on.

"Hellburn," she snapped, "don't be imbecile!"

Did that old cat foresee some tragic consequence from all this? It almost seemed so. The music stopped and out of nowhere came a drone, a hum that grew more and more audible.

Dancers came from the ballroom to stand on the terraces, gazing up into an opaque heaven. The motor of the low flying plane sounded a varying pitch, an effect like a mute drawn in and out of the flare of a horn. Owwwwwww—ooooo—rrrrr—ahhhhhh—ooooo—

"Haviland!" went the exclamation.

Moira became the focus of accusing stares. Dickie was up there, furious with Moira, going to hell in his own dramatic way to show her.

"Idiot!" said Moira under her breath, and carried her smile.

People in their unbelievable stupidity were still saying: "Airplane," telling each other, "Airplane." They said: "Up there," pointing up there.

Lieutenant Sparrow's face wore a frown that added years and dignity. He knew the meaning of the queer arpeggios in the whine of the plane's motor. "Stunt flying," he muttered. "Wha' th' hell ails that fella?"

"What did you say?" Moira asked him sharply.

"Tail spin. Loops. Outside loop, I think. Say, has the heat got Haviland?" He knew nothing of Dickie's frenzy of jealousy. He was thinking as a pilot about a pilot's problem. But Moira fidgeted under his stare. "Night flying!" he talked to himself. "Stunts! In an ol' stork that ain't fit to take off'n the ground!"

"Court-martial?" she asked.

He answered her with a sardonic laugh.

"I asked you—" she began in a peremptory tone.

She irritated him now. "Lieutenant Haviland is in command of the squadron," he told her with sarcasm. "He can fly when he damn likes. Court-martial, no. Inquest? Probably."

The old man rose with a face apoplectic and stamped in to the telephones. The bark of his voice reached the terraces. Now a signal gun rattled on the lifeless air, and a small searchlight bit the night hysterically.

"Ordering him down," Moira said in relief.

"How jolly!" was the Sparrow's disagreeable retort.

"Look here! I don't like your tone. I suppose you mean it's difficult to land at night safely. Is that it?"

"Like unscrambling an egg," curtly. Then: some one's bumped off. Say, why should Haviland act that-a-way? The question to which every one else knew the answer!

The drone of the plane died in the distance and the music began again. For three minutes the jazz rasped on ragged nerves till somebody stopped it in the middle of a bar. We all stood on the terrace, listening in dread for the crash of Dickie's plane. We were angry with him for worrying us, and yet too worried over him to be really angry with him. Most of us took our feelings out on Moira in scowls. She, in much the same state of mind, silently damned us all.

It was an ordeal for her, all right. Worse, probably, than she deserved.

A motorcycle snorted up the drive, an orderly leaped out and broke through the crowd which closed in behind him. In front of the old man he came to salute and reported.

"Lieutenant Haviland has landed his ship, sir."

The old man mopped his face. "How'd he do it?"

"Nobody knows, sir."

Moira's light laugh rang clear and knocking above the general sigh of belief. Dickie's death would have been, with some injustice, on her head. Dickie's monkey business was his own show. Moira saw her chance to end an embarrassing moment. She drew Jimmy Sparrow toward the ballroom and nodded to the musicians. The band crashed into a fox trot, and the dance was on.

"Clever girl," I remarked in my affable way to Mrs. Sterling.

She rewarded me with a violent sniff of disgust. "If I were Dorothy Haviland—" she began.

"Don't we all, I asked her, suavely, 'get about what is due us from life? The most we insist on having, or at least we're willing to accept. Moira, Dorothy, all the rest of us. We manage our own lives. Nobody can help us. It's no use to talk.' I lit a cigaret and gazed dramatically at nothing. 'Life is a many ring circus. N'est-ce pas, as we Parisians say?'"

Leaving the good lady with this infuriating piece of whangdoodle, I ambled off in the direction of my bungalow. Before midnight, I dare say her thoughts ran, I would be lapsed in solitary drunkenness.

However, I had other plans. Once out of sight of the Embassy club, I changed my course and gait. Fifteen minutes walking in the accursed humid heat brought me to the Haviland's place.

"Your husband," I announced to Dorothy, "has been making a long eared object of himself, if you should ask." With that I sat down near her on the veranda, where a beam of light from indoors gave me a view of her profile.

Evidently she had heard the plane. "He was making a test flight," she said, coldly. "I suppose plenty of people agree with you, though, that a man who isn't afraid is a donkey."

I lit a cigaret on the end of the last. "Test flight," I murmured, letting her insult pass. "Well, there's no doubt left that his ship will do Immelman turns over the Embassy by starlight. Heaven knows how he landed the thing!"

"He learned a long time ago how to land a ship in the path of a motorcycle headlight."

I studied her with admiration. "You're almost perfect," I told her. "But you clenched your hands, and you're three shades paler."

"And you're three shades ruder than usual," said Dorothy. "Go away, I don't want to talk to you tonight."

"You're evading. You like to talk to me because I'm one who hates this poisonous bog of intrigue as much as you do."

"What have I to evade?"

"The elite," I said, "stopped their revelries for fifteen minutes tonight, to worry about your charming husband."

"Well, I daresay they'll be able to catch up again."

"Very likely. I wasn't touched on their account. I was merely telling you the pretty story. Moira and Dickie have split. The other man is the new ace, Sparrow, who by the way is a nice little boy and doesn't even know what it's all about. Dickie is doing tail-spins over the terrace to show Moira something or other. Moira bit her lip in annoyance, and went back to dance with Jimmy. Mrs. Sterling says it's an outrage." I yawned.

Dorothy's eyes were trained on me under their long, straight lashes. "You expect me to do something?"

"I never give advice."

She hesitated. There was a certain tenderness, or friendliness about her

What Was Justice in This Case?

JOSEPH S. MINTER, who confessed that he killed State Senator Albert E. Bogdon, of Denver, Col., after he had witnessed intimacies between Bogdon and Mrs. Minter, has been sentenced to serve one year in jail, having been convicted of involuntary manslaughter.

He had spied on the two from a hotel window overlooking his wife's apartment, he said, then had gone to the apartment, broken down the door and shot Bogdon to death.

Could this be called a justifiable killing? Or almost justifiable killing? Minter and his wife had separated; she had filed suit for divorce. Was her subsequent behavior any business of his, except in so far as it concerned their divorce? And could he call upon the unwritten law in this case?

Justice decided that it wasn't exactly justifiable, but almost so.

It is a passionate story, this tale of Helena Minter and her romances. Passion dominates it from beginning to end, from the days of her early triumphs in high school to the violent scene in which a dignified state senator, one of the political powers of Colorado, met death at the hands of an infuriated husband.

When she met Joe Minter the young woman already had traveled some way along the road of romance. While still in high school she had fallen in love with and married a young street car conductor named Guy Kennedy. She had lived with him three years and then divorced him because he was "playing around" with some other girl.

Her marriage to Minter took place in 1923. She met him at a dance hall. It was fated to be an unfortunate marriage for both of them, for she was a luxury-loving, pleasure-seeking wife, and he was a jealous, tempestuous husband. He had been gassed on the Somme during the war, and no doubt his nerves had never quite recovered.

Two years of growing disillusionment for both of them, two years of growing bitterness—and then they separated, only to reunite and quarrel and separate again. Apparently, her love cooled while his grew into an almost maniacal attachment. The more she slipped, the more desperately he strove to hold her.

Suit for Divorce.

But they separated finally, and the wife brought suit for divorce. She obtained a small position in Denver. Minter in the meantime had been in the employ of the Mountain States Telephone company.

"I was getting along well until my husband bobbed up again and began to wait for me at my office every night," Mrs. Minter related later. "I didn't suspect that he knew where I lived, or I wouldn't have permitted any one to come to my place, knowing my husband as I do."

We shall see what come of his knowledge of where she lived, and what happened to a visitor there.

The events leading up to the tragedy have been told in detail by Minter himself. He said he had been brooding for a long while; that the final separation and suit for divorce, on the grounds of cruelty had shattered him completely, so much so that he lost his job with the telephone company. That was in May.

Then early in June, according to his story, he wrote his mother, telling her that he was going to the coast to start things all over again.

"But I got to thinking," he said, "why leave Helena, whom I dearly loved? Why not try a reconciliation? I decided I would."

Strangely enough, however, his next act, as related by him, was to hire a room at the Bellevue hotel overlooking his wife's rooms in the adjacent apartment house.

Was this the proper step for a husband bent on reconciliation? The reader may not think so, but Minter apparently was not in a very reasonable state of mind.

Minter registered at the hotel under the name of R. V. Mandell, this so that his wife's lawyer would not have him arrested for bothering her.

He said that at noon Thursday, June 9, he met his wife and they went to lunch together. They went to a chop suey place because, as he said, "Helena loved chop suey." They talked over their affairs.

"I asked her then to come back to me and we would try all over again—out on the coast," he said. "I saw her lips quiver. I reached over and laid my hands on hers and something within me prompted me to ask her a question."

"Helena," I asked, are you still true to me?"

"True, Joe!" she said back to me, looking me straight in the eyes. "Yes, I am true to you, Joe—of course!"

"After lunch we went to Joslin's store, where she left me at the doorway, repeating her vows to me that she had been on the square."

"But I had been watching."

He meant that he had been watching his wife, spying on her in her apartment from his point of observation in the hotel.

"I went back to the Bellevue hotel at 8 o'clock," he continued. "My shade was up. I could look across a courtyard, some twenty feet, right into her room in the Alrose apartment house. Her shade was up about five inches. I saw a light flash on there, at dusk. Then I saw a man come in."

He said he strained his ears to listen, heard the man say, "Hello, honey-bunch!" and heard his wife cry,

"Hello, dear!" and throw herself into the man's arms. Then they kissed, he said, she in his arms.

According to Minter, the two went over to the bed, embraced, and talked "puppy love." The husband saw it all, he said, though her shade was up but five inches.

"Do you still love me, kid?" the man asked.

"Why, always?" the women replied, according to Minter. "I've worn out two pairs of stockings for you this week, Albert!" He assured her she needn't worry about that—he guessed he could afford to buy her plenty of stockings.

Still True?

All this Minter said he heard, though he stood at a window twenty feet away in the hotel. He said he almost went insane.

He moved to another room in the Bellevue, he said, to get a better view. He said he saw them kissing and hugging.

"Think of that, my wife!" he cried to his listeners after the tragedy. "And me watching. It was like a stab of cold steel through my heart. I got up, shook myself and went to a telephone, calling police headquarters. I was nearly crazy."

"I told them there what I had seen, but Captain Barry said it was merely a civil divorce matter and not a matter for the police. I hung up and rushed out into the street. I saw a sergeant and asked him—I saw another policeman and asked him—all were too busy to bother with me. So at the keyhole. I could hear them.

"My brain was on fire. I wanted only to confront the man—scare him off—and ask my wife to come with me. I was ready to forgive and forget, even then. But my blood was boiling. I loved her."

"I listened. I rapped twice. I heard a commotion after the knocks. A door slammed—"

"I crashed through the outer door. 'Stand where you are, fellow!' I ordered."

"So you're the mister, are you?" he says.

With that, according to Minter's account, the other man leaped at him, disregarding the gun.

"He got both hands on the gun," said Minter. "We struggled. He hit me with his fist. I fired over his head. We struggled some more and in the melee my gun went off again. He staggered. He pushed me out of the apartment. I saw him stagger to the bathroom, where Helena had gone, and fall."

Minter said he ran out in the hallway and shouted for help, then came back to find his wife bending over the body of the other man.

"Kill Him?"

"O, Joe!" she cried. "Why did you kill him?"

"Kill him?"

Then a stranger came in. "Can I help you, mister?" he asked, according to Minter.

"Yes; get a doctor!"

"But the man's dead!"

Minter rushed out, frantic, and telephoned police headquarters. Then he ran back to his room in the hotel, changed his clothes and fled into the street. He climbed aboard a street car—he said he didn't know what he was doing. He wanted to get away somewhere and cool off.

"I got off away out and went through the railroad yards, over the Platte river on a bridge, and through the fields toward Morrison," he said. "I fell into ditches, slipped into mud-holes, tore my clothes on fences..."

"When dawn came, I was at Soda Lakes, near Morrison. I had come to my senses. I realized I must go back and give myself up—as a murderer!"

"I walked back to Denver. On my way I bought a copy of the paper. Then for the first time I knew my victim's name."

The victim, it appeared, was none other than State Senator Albert E. Bogdon, member of the municipal civil service commission, law partner of City Attorney Henry E. May, possible successor of Ben Lindsey as judge of the juvenile court, and a power in Colorado state politics. Furthermore, he was a married man and a father.

On reaching the city, Minter hailed a taxicab.

"Know who I am?" he inquired of the driver, F. K. Welsh.

"No, I don't," said the driver.

Minter showed Welsh the newspaper and said, "I'm Minter, the guy they're looking for. I want to go to police headquarters—to give myself up."

The driver complied with alacrity.

So Minter, nerve-wracked and voluble, surrendered. Blurting out his story, stopping now and then to cry into a wet handkerchief, he was a pitiful object as he sat in police headquarters, telling his story to District Attorney Foster Cline and Chief of Police R. F. Reed.

"This fellow was playing around with my wife," he told them. "She

"Do you still like me?" I heard the man ask.

"Yes!" she replied.

"They embraced again. I picked up my gun and went over. I listened

INSTALLMENT VI.

IRST in regard to Mustaffa Bek, he found out that this morning, before a magistrate and afterwards before a priest in the Madeleine, he had become the husband of Delphine Duval, who had formerly been a chanteuse in a cabaret; that he had taken an apartment on the Boulevard des Invalides, had ordered a special Rolls Royce, and would go on a prolonged Riviera honeymoon as soon as the car was delivered; and that almost 25 million francs were to his credit in several French banks. Secondly, he discovered that, for the last few months, Lord Carmyon had shared a narrow bedroom in the Rue de Turbigo with Prince Mehmet Tamerlanoff and Hector Aristide L'Hommedieu, who had been his pals in the French army during the world war; that they had called on Sultana Evelyn at the Hotel Violette, being unknown to her at the time; that they had been seen in the company of a notorious apache, called Bibi le Farcour; that, within the last ten days, they had deposited enormous sums in local banks; that, quite recently, they had withdrawn these deposits, taking in exchange partly cash, partly negotiable securities, and partly letters of credit on Asiatic branches of European banks as well as on native oriental private bankers; that, finally, the three of them had sailed, two days earlier, for Calcutta aboard the P. & A. steamship Semiramis.

Platon Fyodorovitch Kuprine digested, correlated and dovetailed all this information. He was pleased. The whispering, gossiping chorus had done its work well. Then he decided to use the other weapon in his arsenal: fear.

Therefore he telegraphed to a certain Major Sir Vaughan Brown-Vaughan, D. S. O., V. C., who was by way of being military attache to the British embassy in Paris—an honorable position which he honorably filled.

The telegram read:

"I should be awfully glad to see you tonight.

(Signed) "DUTELLIER."

Yet Sir Vaughan, returning in a happy mood, quite late, from a corking party given by the Duchess de Rohan-Chabot, rightly interpreted it as meaning:

"I order you to call on me as soon as you receive this."

We mentioned that he honorably filled an honorable position. He did. But, a number of years ago, he had filled a similar honorable position not so honorably. There had been a combination of race horses that were too slow and women that were too fast. There had been frequent visits to Sam Lewis, the Lombard street usurer. There had been, one day, the latter's flat refusal to renew a note for 20,000 guineas—and bankruptcy, disgrace, cashiering from the army staring Sir Vaughan in the face. There had been discreet word passed by old Sam to Kuprine, then in the tsar's service; and, a few weeks later, Kuprine's perfectly good check for 50,000 guineas exchanged for a slip of paper on which were certain intricate figures and diagrams dealing with a brand new and especially murderous British machine gun.

So, at half past three in the morning, Sir Vaughan-Brown-Vaughan, D. S. O., V. C., entered Kuprine's living room—a charming place, with tables and chairs of satinwood, gorgeous tapestries and rugs, flowers in vases of Venetian glass, countless chinoiserie and bits of bric-a-brac, and a low divan filled with cushions of sumptuous Byzantine dalmatice.

But Sir Vaughan had no eye for all these delightful details.

He stood there, tall, lean, his narrow features sloping wedged-shaped to a cleft chin, and stared at his host and demanded with a sort of hopeless truculence:

"How much longer is this damned blackmail business going to last?"

"As long as we both live. Of course you have always the privilege of ending it—by either killing me or committing suicide."

"Don't be melodramatic!"

"I can't help it. I'm a Russian, you know. Incidentally, you're wrong. No blackmail—this time. I'm only asking you for a small favor—I call it favor to be polite."

"Well? Carry on!"

Kuprine spoke rapidly for several minutes; added:

"Can you do it? Which, again, I am putting that way to be polite. For—you must do it."

Sir Vaughan was visibly relieved.

"Easy enough," he replied; and continued, with a bitter smile: "nor as dishonorable as I had feared. All right. The governor of Bengal is a cousin of mine. I'll cable him."

* * *

At that moment—if we figure the difference in time between Paris and Calcutta—the governor of Bengal, Sir Hastings Rivett-Carnac, a short, thick, grizzled old man with a fine network of tiny red veins on his bibulous nose, was giving a dinner party at his official residence.

He was very much bored. For at his right sat the Dowager Duchess of Leigshbury, ancient, hook nosed, with a face like a vignette in some fantastic, lewd Belgian book. She was the widow of a former Indian viceroy, and very deaf; and she was holding forth, to Sir Hastings, in a stentorian voice about her late husband's methods of raising a special breed of red Duroc prize pigs.

"Of course," she said, "that was after the duke returned to England. And, my dear Sir Hastings," she continued more loudly than ever while, across the table from her, a handsome young Rajput Rajah, who heretofore had been enthusiastically pro-British, swore silently then and there—swore by Vishnu and Shiva and Kali—to throw in his lot with the anti-British nationalists, "the duke claimed until his dying day that ruling Hindus gave him no end of pointers in the successful raising of pigs."

"If you please, Hoozoor!" whispered a crimson turbaned Bengali servant, delivering Sir Vaughan's cablegram to the governor.

The latter welcomed the interruption; opened the envelope; read; and turned to the duchess:

"Frightfully sorry, your grace. Important official business. Very urgent."

And he went to a small study on the top floor; lay down on a leather couch; helped himself liberally to whisky and potash; lit a cigar; and reread the message.

"Carmyon," he thought. "Know him. Used to be in the Indian service . . . don't know the other two eggs."

Then he fell asleep. He had lied to the duchess. The business, though official in a way, was not so very urgent.

For the Semiramis was not due in Calcutta until the end of the month; was, in fact, many leagues to the west of the Suez canal—with a warm wind out of Egypt meeting the shock of the racing, foaming billows serenely, throwing them one upon the other like napkins—and the sky so velvet black that it seemed morning could never come again . . . a glorious night, a glorious sea.

"Come on up on deck and take a look," said Lord Carmyon to L'Hommedieu, who was in his cabin. "It's worth while."

"What is?"

"The stars! The waves! The—"

"Scenery, eh?" cried the Gascon, who was homesick as well as seasick. "Scenery means nothing to me. I wish I had not come on this journey."

"And you one of the three musketeers—a cavalier—a beau sabreur!"

"At this moment: I do not feel chivalrously inclined. I am a dying man."

"Don't be an ass!"

"Even an ass—alas!—can die. And you choose this moment to speak to me of scenery. The sea? Ah—I despise it. Give me the land! Give me the gutters of the Rue de Turbigo! Give me Paris! Give me the Central market! Give me Jacqueline!"

Nor, except for slight variations, did the Gascon change his tune until at the end of the month, very early one morning, Calcutta was in sight and all the ship's little world on deck swapping visiting cards and promises to write which would not be kept, and beginning to reestablish the rigid social lines of Anglo-India which divide a deputy assistant commissioner's mother-in-law from the wife of a penniless subaltern of native infantry—lines more strict than the strictest Hindu caste law—lines which had been partly forgotten in the humanizing influence of an ocean steamship.

The three musketeers were leaning over the top deck gunwale, looking out to where the sun was rising in the distant east behind lowering cloud banks that were like mountains of gold-glowing lava. There was a gauze-like fog which lifted suddenly, and, minute by minute, Job Char-nock's old town came more sharply into the focus. Nearer and nearer it came until they could see the details—and all about them chattering, laughing, gossiping Anglo-Indians picking out familiar landmarks.

The roofs of the city were bathed in purple light. The windows flashed with a thousand dazzling reflections. The whole was Calcutta on a perfect day in early summer; a city of brass and copper and gold, hard-shimmering, like the legendary city the Titans once forged out of the molten fragments of a forgotten world.

So, obeying the touch of the master pilot, the Semiramis zigzagged its way through the sand banks of the great man-eating Hoogil river, which, every once in a while, rises kittenishly, gnawing at the water front with iron teeth, strewn the surrounding landscape with the torn, battered carcasses of big ships. Beyond the town the highlands came into view, closing in like a tide of stone—as if Asia were there, squatting behind those naked, sun-scorched ridges that gleamed like topaz and amethyst—Asia, passive, patient, unwieldy, yet threatening—threatening even in its sleep the handful of Europeans who were clinging to its outer fringe.

Soldiers of fortune, these Europeans, thought Lord Carmyon.

Soldiers of fortune, every one of them, be they in scarlet and gold and carrying glittering swords, or paunchy merchants with no other weapons but their ledgers and check books.

Soldiers of fortune, out for loot!

Asia's loot!

Rather sordid, he thought—rather nasty.

Still, what about himself? Was he not, too, a soldier of fortune, about to knock at the gate of the Asian treasure house?

Of course he was!

But at least—he counted in his thoughts—a soldier of fortune not altogether for the sake of gain. But for the sake of a girl's russet hair and fearless violet-blue eyes.

He smiled; was startled when he heard Tamerlanoff's voice:

"You look very much pleased with yourself—in fact, self-righteous. Are you?"

"I'm afraid I am!" admitted Lord Carmyon.

So presently the Semiramis backed into its dock slips with a clanking of chains, a rasping and scraping of boards.

After the lulling quiet of the ocean, the roar of the huge city was enormous, intolerable—and, blending in, the shouts of the lascar sailors, singing rhythmically to the heave and strain of the tackle or yelling greetings to some unkempt, turbaned friend among the native crowd which spat and perspired on the wooden wharf—and, rather less enthusiastic, the voices of a few Anglo-Indians, dead white with the heat of the tropics, waving sun helmets as they recognized whom-ever they had come to meet, wondering, doubtless, if wife or daughter, back from her four months' London shopping trip, had left enough money in the bank account so that they, in their turn, could go on a much needed rest to the Himalayas or perhaps to Burmah after the rains and bag there a rhinoceros and a couple of jungle cats.

"Everybody ashore!"

And, with the other passengers, the three musketeers walked down the gangplank, submitted to the mild ordeal of the Indian customs house, stepped out into the broad street which flanked the dock, and were immediately engulfed by a crowd of native coolies—coolies in every conceivable and unconceivable state of raggedness—jabbering in every known and unknown language—offering their services in every proper and improper capacity.

"Come with me, saheb!" a fat Bengali said to L'Hommedieu. "I will get you a native dancing girl. Hoochie-koochie—you know, saheb?"—and, shamelessly, he lifted his single garment and tripped a mincing, obscene step—"ah, swell tiptop dancing girl."

One was assuring Prince Tamerlanoff that he loved him—loved him like his own brother—"that is why I seek the protection of your exquisite and honorable shadow, hoozoor!" while another, kissing Lord Carmyon's hand with explosive smacks and evident relish, exclaimed:

"Whatever I have, whatever you want of me, is yours, O saheb! Is it my life you want? Here is the dagger! Is it my hand? Here is the fire! Is it my neck? Here is the cord? Ah—and only fifty rupees a month."

Lord Carmyon laughed. He knew India.

"All we want," he replied, "is a small car"—for there were a number of flivvers shooting about—"to take us to our hotel—"

"Lord Carmyon?" a voice interrupted, and a burly Englishman stepped up.

"Yes."

"And these two gentlemen are, I fancy, Prince Tamerlanoff and M. L'Hommedieu?"

"Right again. Why?"

"Because you are under arrest!"

And at the same moment a dozen policemen, some British and some native, closed in about the three musketeers.

Later on L'Hommedieu described Lord Carmyon's conduct that morning on the Calcutta water front as magnificent and heroic and superb, while the other insisted it had been nothing of the kind, but merely the result of his intense dislike of garlic.

"You see," he explained, "when that burly Anglo-Indian chap—he turned out to be no end of a way-up brass hat in the Indian secret service—told us we were jolly well pinched and, in answer to my question, growled something about our being political suspects and that he was obeying orders from the governor of Bengal, I thought immediately of the Capt. Jones person—intrigues—dirty work on the crossroads, eh what? Even so, being an average, fairly law abiding citizen, I had not the faintest intention of resisting arrest. Nor did my two pals. Still, it was rather a facer—wasn't it?—to be thwarted so early in our romantic quest, and so I felt—O, disappointed, terribly blue—and I lit a cigarette to steady my nerves, which evidently was contrary to local municipal police regulation No. 1776. For 'Not permitted, saheb!' a native police sergeant barks at me, sticking his ugly face into close proximity to my nose. He must have breakfasted liberally on stewed garlic, and I can't stand the smell, never could. It doesn't make me sick, but angry, indignant. I consider it in the line of a grave, personal insult. So, hardly realizing what I was doing, I drew back my right fist and let him have it—bamm!—straight on the jaw. He dropped like a dog. And at once his colleagues, Hindus as well as British, were upon me."

They closed in on him like hounds pulling down a stag. He dodged and danced and grappled. At one and the same time he was trying to land blow, to parry blow, to sidestep kicking feet and crashing elbows—heard a high, metallic French yell, a deep-throated Russian bellow as his two friends rushed to the rescue—saw anxious steamship officials shoo away the few frightened, chattering, curious passengers who were still on the dock—saw a heavy police bludgeon crash down on Prince Tamerlanoff's head and stretch him unconscious—saw L'Hommedieu buried beneath an avalanche of blue clad arms and legs and, a moment later, saw him jerked up standing, his wrists manacled, a red, ragged wound across his forehead... saw it all vaguely, like pictures in a dream; for he had his own work cut out, fighting off his assailants.

Perhaps there were too many of them for their own comfort. They interfered with each other, tripped and hit each other in their eagerness to get at Lord Carmyon, who was perfectly safe in striking whatever head came within reach of his fists—they went like flails—he had done so much better at Oxford in the noble art of self-defense than in translating Titus Livius and Latin serpentine verses. He did very well indeed, bloodying a nose here, blackening an eye there—really enjoying himself.

By this time a crowd of natives had collected; partly honest, hard working stevedores and lascars and wharfingers, partly riff-raff of the water front, dock rats, the sweepings of the Calcutta gutters—Bengalis and Madrassis, Afghans and Malays, and men from all the Moffusil—an ethnographical chart of half Asia's picturesque and ruffianly races.

They hated the police. Too, they hated all sahebs. So they were in a quandary as to their sympathies.

For here was a saheb fighting the police—"fighting," commented a fur-capped Afghan, watching with gleaming eyes, "like a very Rustum!"

"By my own and my mother's honor!" cried another, as—biff!—Carmyon's fist found its painful mark—

"here is a fine nose spoiled for many a day!"

A third—a Rajput slightly drunk on hashish, thus of a poetical turn of mind—gave as his opinion that this yellow-haired madman was the pick of all the swank, roaring, battling lads—the sort which a brave, adventurous man, out for foray and raid, would choose to ride with side by side.

A tiny Madrassi hugged himself with glee and yelled: "A tiger has come amongst us! A regal, jungly tiger! Hayah!"—encouraging at Lord Carmyon, his voice rising in a sharp treble—"Rung hao, maharajah tiger!"

"Because you are under arrest."

"But a tiger," said the Afghan, as Carmyon was being pressed back toward the cordon of onlookers, "who presently will be pulled down by the little, little jackals!"

Indeed, numbers were beginning to tell. At the Afghan's very feet, straining, wrestling, grappling, clawing, cursing, Lord Carmyon fell to the ground, a policeman sitting on his chest, a second booting him in the ribs, a third dancing about swinging his bludgeon, watching his chance for a knockout blow. Once he nearly did it, swishing the club sideways and down with a vicious lunge. But Carmyon snapped his head back in the nick of time. The next second, with a sudden violent bunching of muscles, he pinioned the arms of the policeman who sat on his chest—a lean, hook-nosed Punjaubi—to his sides, spread his strong legs, and tried desperately to pull himself on top. He was succeeding in this when the other, since a British uniform does not necessarily civilize a Junjaubi, gave way to a primitive urge, snarled wolfishly, and sank sharp teeth in Lord Carmyon's left ear.

The latter shrieked in rage and pain. With a great jerk and heave he freed himself, sending the first policeman into the second, the second into the third—who dropped his night stick.

Carmyon picked it up—and—he had been a capital cricketer at Eton and Oxford—threw it with unerring aim and stunning force at the burly Anglo-Indian secret service official who had placed him and his friends under arrest.

Why at him instead of at the Punjaubi?

He did not stop to figure out the psychological reason. Later on he explained it as an instinctive gesture—perhaps because the Anglo-Indian was looking on in such a cool, unperturbed manner.

Cool and unperturbed not for long.

For the club struck him between the eyes.

"O, my word!" he managed to gasp out ludicrously, ineffectually, just as he beheld seven thousand pretty red stars and collapsed on the ground—while, at the same time, a shrill, hectic whistle summoned the reserves, and while, still at the same time, the Afghan in the crowd of native onlookers made up his mind that his sympathies were with this fair-haired young man, although he was a saheb.

So—the policemen temporarily demoralized through the fall of their leader—the Afghan exchanged rapid, guttural words with the mob.

Prosy Behari proverbs, dealing with such unsophisticated everyday specialties in Indian husbandry as elephants and ploughs and jackasses; meaningless except in their straight, rustic sense, to an honest Hindu, but full of subtle, sardonic significance to the criminal castes of Calcutta when exchanging confidences about snatching a purse, slitting a throat, rifling a bazaar—or helping a saheb who is battling the police.

"Pet bhari se manth bharai..."

Laughter.

"Hai—hai—hai..."

The laughter of the orient, riotous, exaggerated, gargantuan, unrestrained; and, as the blue clad defenders of law and order were rallying to the attack, the Afghan suddenly reached out, grasped Lord Carmyon by the arm, and jerked him into the mob of natives that closed about them like a brown sea.

"Come!" he whispered. "Quick!"

For a moment the Englishman resisted. He tried to pull away. There were his friends. He could not leave them in the lurch. Then, rapidly, he reconsidered. Better one at liberty, he thought, than all three in jail. Besides, in a broad belt next to his skin, he carried the letters of credit and large packages of bank notes. And he laughed, laughed rather hysterically, while the brown sea surged into motion, carrying him along, away from the docks, the water front.

Turbans and tarbushes and shaven polls bobbed crazily; ragged cloaks and torn burnouses flared out like flags in a wind; muscular, naked legs moved up and down grotesquely—faster and faster, on and on, off and away into a spider's web of dark, dirty, cobble-paved alleys, a sinuous, ironic winding of narrow passages, a maze of cheap bazaars where everything was for sale, including the owners' daughters—while the policemen began their lumbering pursuit, swearing, blowing whistles, shouting.

"Stop! Stop! In the name of the law! In the name of the king-emperor's majesty!"

They might have saved their breath. Few, if any, in that particular part of town, cared a tinker's curse for either the law or the king-emperor's majesty. And so, since bare feet can run faster and trip less in slimy puddles than booted feet, the viewhalloo cries of the police grew fainter and fainter, while the mob continued at top speed, finally splitting and deploying as they entered a packed wilderness of nameless streets... and you may, though I hope you do not, know their English and American counterpart—the Scotland Road division of Liverpool, New York's Bowery and Hell's Kitchen of a generation ago, or Chicago's First ward during the legendary days of Hinky Dink.

Here the water front spilled over with taverns and dives, with sailors' boarding houses and crimps' places and ship chandlers' and second hand stores, where every last mildewy curio a sailor, for reasons only known to himself, packs in his dunnage can be bought. Too, men from all Asia; men who go down to the sea in ships and come up from the sea, as often as not, in rickety cabs and lordly flivvers to spend the bitter wages of six weeks' battling with storms and rotten timbers in one night's vicious, scarlet spree amongst the yellow liquor and yellower girls of Calcutta—wrongly called the City of Palaces by those British residents who only know the meretricious splendors of the Maidan, Dalhousie square and the Bengal Club.

Delightful—Dalhousie square—makes you think of London—London on a perfect day in May, when the tulips show shy little heads in Regents park. And the Bengal club? Perfect. As good as any club in St. James', and the champagne even better.

Quite different from the docks—"blacktown"—the real Calcutta.

Smell of offal there, of hashish, filth, unwashed bodies, cloying perfumes, pestilence, blood, vice hectic and vice drab. All that and—safety, as the Afghan, who was still holding on to Lord Carmyon's arm, explained to him:

"Safety for those who need it, saheb of my heart."

"I do need it," laughed the other. "Where shall I find it?"

"Anywhere here—as long as you can pay the price. Here—the first house!"

He knocked loudly at the door of a sailors' dive whence came a confused mingling of sounds, peaking up as if in an unbridled display of Asia's passions—a shriek of laughter, clinking glasses, a woman's high-pitched cry—other voices joining in with harsh gutturals, and a scraping of stringed

IN THE White House there is a massive black walnut bed which is known as the Abraham Lincoln bed. There appears to be no record which authenticates this designation, but because of its unusual length and proportionate width and the fact that at the time President Lincoln lived there black walnut was much in vogue the tradition is reasonable.

The bed is eight feet long and five feet six inches wide. The headboard heavily carved, rises to a height of ten feet. In the center of it is a large oval panel within which are two smaller oval panels, beautiful in curves and proportions. The carving at the top is pierced and the design is of branches and leaves, with two large birds perched thereon.

The footboard is low, higher in the center where it measures two feet eight inches, curving down to the slightly lower corners. On the face of the footboard is more carving in bold relief, and here another large bird sits lightly amid the foliage of a spreading vine.

The sideboards are heavy and are not carved. At the points where they join the headboard there are heavy arms or brackets with cut-outs but no carving.

This bed now stands in the southwest chamber, where two large windows afford a view across the south grounds to the Washington Monument towering beyond and the Potomac glimmering in the sunshine in one small spot still farther on. A brass plate attached to the mantel in this room records:

"In this room Abraham Lincoln slept during his occupancy of the White House—March fourth, 1861 to April thirteenth 1865.

As the years pass into history these personal touches become increasingly interesting and the hallowed memories clustering around this Home of the Nation make of it a veritable shrine. Too few of them survive, and out of a desire that the years to come may add an increasing store of such memories this coverlet for the Lincoln bed has been made by the wife of the thirtieth President of the United States stitch by stitch and square by square, with the hope that each mistress of the President's House will leave there some token which shall go down through the ages to serve as a definite and visible link connecting the present and the past. The making of the coverlet was accomplished in two years, the greater part being done in the White House and the final stitches taken on board the U. S. S. Mayflower during the President's review of the fleet at Hampton Roads in June, 1927.

It is impossible to give detailed directions for the making of this coverlet, but with a few general directions and the diagrams presented an experienced artist with the crochet hook would have no difficulty in executing a coverlet of similar design which would fit the particular bed for which it is intended. The main thing is to ascertain how many squares the individual who is crocheting the coverlet makes -- the inch and then with a little counting and planning go ahead. In the coverlet illustrated there are twenty-one squares to six inches. The material used is shoe thread, which is a little finer than carpet warp out of the same texture. The hook was No. 4. The work should be done firmly. The three larger blocks were crocheted separately, as was also the strip "E Pluribus Unum," and sewn together over and over with a double strand of the material. This method gave more ease in handling. The insertion on each side was crocheted in strips and sewn to the center section. The border was then made and the piece at the foot. This piece was joined to the ends of the border making a boxed effect which fits down over the corners.

The center sections were begun on a foundation chain of 414 stitches. Make 1 dc (double crochet, thread over hook, insert in work, draw loop through, thread over hook, draw through 2 loops on hook, thread over draw through two remaining loops) in fourth stitch from hook in the foundation chain. 1 dc in each of the remaining 410 stitches. turn. Second row--3 chain. 1 dc in second dc from hook and 1 dc in each of next 2 dcs of previous row. * ch (chain) 2, dc in third dc from hook, repeat from * until there are 135 open meshes dc in each of two following stitches, 1 dc in three chain at the end.

Repeat this row until there are as many rows of open meshes as appear in the diagram. Follow the design working from the bottom to the top.

For the insertion make a chain of 126 stitches. 1 dc in fourth stitch from hook and in each of following 122 stitches. Follow the design working the narrow way of the insertion.

The edge is begun on a foundation chain of 66 stitches and can easily be followed from the diagram. This is also worked the narrow way.

For the piece at the bottom begin with a chain of the same length as for the center blocks, 414 stitches, and crochet from the top to the bottom of the strip.

now. "I love Dickie," she said.

"I know it."

"But I wouldn't lure him, or nag him, or—he may have what he wants! I won't fight to hold him, Hellburn!"

"Dickie," I said, "didn't come to the party tonight, as I remarked." Then impolitely I looked at my watch and rose.

"Going?" she asked.

"Yes. Good luck to you, Dorothy." I added, mysteriously: "You can bring it off all right."

A final quarter of moon came up and hung like a blob of orange vapor in the sky, as a faint, cooling west wind stole across the terraces of the Embassy club with a breath of relief for jaded dancers. Jimmy Sparrow, wilted and vaguely resentful, looked over Moira's shoulder to see what had caused the last gulp of astonishment from the crowd.

From what he had seen of Queens-town, all the members of the colony were a little touched in the head by the heat. Every other time a person came into the ballroom or went out of it the whole crowd whooped.

Now, framed by the wide doorway was a girl, and she was looking at him as nearly as he could tell. To his jaded senses in that moment she suggested dew, and forest shadows, and coolness. She wore a silver frock that fell in slender lines from her shoulders. The chiffon with its weight of sequins clung to her figure, and she had the loveliness of a silver cascade suddenly glimpsed.

"Who is that?"

Moira carelessly glanced, and smiled mockingly. "Don't you know? You ought to, I'm sure."

"I don't remember."

"Remind me to tell you," she tantalized him. "Meanwhile, do please find me a drink of something with a gallon of cracked ice in it."

In search of Moira's order, Jimmy bumped into Lieutenant Haviland, who had been summoned here by the commandant. He had just broken away from the old man at last.

"O! I say . . ." The two stood there in the flag-stoned foyer, and Haviland's look was unpleasant. Jimmy stammered. "Made it all right, hm?"

"Why not?" snapped Dickie.

Well, no doubt he'd heard enough for one night about his escapade. Jimmy changed the subject. "Say, it's devilish awkward. I wish you'd tell me who that girl is, over there."

Haviland looked, and his eyes got bigger. Then he stiffened, and his face grew red. "None of your damned business," he snarled, and turned abruptly into the tap room.

Jimmy took two angry steps and stopped with a rueful grin. "The heat," he decided. "Get's 'em all, I reckon."

That unknown girl piqued him. There seemed to be some devilish scheme here to keep him from knowing her, and that gave him a half-spiteful determination. I saw it in his face as he came up to me.

"Say, help me out, won't you?" he accosted me. "Just been here about three days, and I forget people's names, you know. It's awful awkward. That girl over there who isn't talking to any one . . ."

"That girl?" I asked. "O, that girl. Son, it would never do for you to know her. Now, let me think. There's Moira Varick, nice girl. Better let me introduce you to her."

Jimmy, to my delight, cursed me roundly and went off to find a tall glass with ice and a straw in it. I knew he would meet his lady of mystery now in spite of the devil. Next he looked around and saw Moira in a hook of palms at the far end of the dance floor. At the edge of the nearest group of people, and a little apart from them, was the girl who looked like a wood nymph.

Defiantly Jimmy walked straight up to her and held out the frosted glass, amid the gasps of the multitude. He stood before her in silence like that of the polar spaces.

"May I offer you—" said his ice boy's voice. He heard her murmur her thanks in a voice delightful and low.

He said: "I'm so awful new here. Please tell me your name again, won't you please?"

"Does it matter?" she asked with her faint smile. That sounded agreeably sophisticated.

"Seems sort of foolish," he told her, "not to know the name of the loveliest woman in Queens-town." He always talked with drawling accent that divided his words. "Felt I ought to try to remedy the ignorance somehow."

"O, I think very likely you'll live it down."

"I could not put a lot of time on living it down right now if—" he began eagerly, and looked about him, suddenly flustered. "Lots of faces here tonight, aren't there?" politely.

There were, indeed. The place was full of faces, all staring dumbly at Jimmy and Dorothy. A whole herd of eyes! "I wonder," he suggested shyly, "if maybe it wouldn't be nicer out on the terrace."

As they disappeared into the outer shadows there happened one of the most peculiar of feminine maneuvers.

Dorothy, coolly, quietly, without an effort, had snatched away Moira's most high handed conquest, the cherub Jimmy. Every woman present knew that Moira was sitting alone, deserted. And now all the women with one accord, suavely flattering, corralled every last man at the embassy and held him. There was not a chance of a single man escaping to join Moira Varick.

For five minutes there was a buzz of small talk. Five enduring minutes for Moira to sit there in a helplessness that admitted her defeat in open warfare at Dorothy's hands.

Dickie Haviland came out of the tap room, but he was looking not for Moira but for his wife. She, naturally, was nowhere to be seen, having vanished with Jimmy Sparrow.

Dickie came up to me. His face was flushed and angry. "Hellburn, have you seen my wife, by any chance?"

"Everybody in four hemispheres," I told him, "knows by this time that your wife has just gone out on the terrace with Jimmy Sparrow."

"By God—" he began.

"Don't make an ass of yourself." I soothed him. "Here in Queens-town women do go out on terraces with men not their husbands. You, of all people, know that."

The boy's fists were clenched. "I don't give a —"

"Poise, laddie!" I said softly. "She's yours, but don't rush it. Go, for heaven's sake, and talk to Mrs. Sterling. Tell her some ornate lie or other about flying under sealed orders."

Dickie nodded understandingly and went.

It seems foolish either to put it down or leave it out. In either case, I presume, you had guessed before this. Of course, I loved Dorothy Haviland with a hopeless and idiotic reverence. I wanted to see her happy, and succeeded in that.

instruments, the portentous staccato of a tomtom.

So presently, Lord Carmyon thanked his Good Samaritan, reinforced his thanks with money, and had a short, satisfactory talk with the proprietor of the dive, an individual by the aristocratic Portuguese name of Don Leopoldo Maria de Sousa Machado, who was a walking, living, and quite unsavory proof of the biological theory that the white, the black, and the brown should not mix their seed.

Still—a man willing to do his fair share if you made it worth his while.

He winked at Lord Carmyon; smiled at him with a flash of superb white teeth:

"A private room? Certainly, sir. You wish—ah—to receive no callers? Certainly, sir. In fact, you are not here, in my humble establishment; never have been here? Certainly, sir."

For each "certainly, sir" he held out a slim, clever hand, receiving each time a gold sovereign, bit it each time before pocketing it, and, shortly afterwards, preceded the other up a dark corridor and ushered him into a small room.

Lord Carmyon was tired. He barricaded the door with all the furniture locked the single window high up on the wall, and lay down on the narrow cot.

Decidedly a most ridiculous and undignified predicament for this romantic young man to find himself in, though not a jot more ridiculous and undignified than the predicament of the other two romantic young men.

For they were in jail

They had been arraigned before a bullying, purse-mouthed British magistrate—the sort unable to forget that here, in India, he was a great and powerful saheb, to be bowed and scraped to, while, had he remained in his native Liverpool, he would never have risen above third assistant floor-walker at some draper's shop, with the bowing and scraping the other way around.

"Political suspects—arrested under the defense of the realm act!" he had barked at them, after studying a paper which carried the initials of the governor of Bengal; and, in reply to Prince Tamerlanoff's question: "There'll be no trial. We'll dispense with that little formality. 'You'll be deported on the next ship.'"

"Do you call this British justice—the much advertised British fair play?"

"Do you believe everything you read in advertisements—even national advertisements? Great God—you must be young!" For the magistrate had a certain harsh sense of humor. "Besides, this is India. We've damned little use here for kid glove methods and all that variety of sentimental poppycock—"

"But you'll have use for my rights—my rights as a French citizen," the Gascon had interrupted. "I demand that my counsel be notified."

"He'll be notified—don't you worry on that score. But by that time—due to a regrettable error for which we shall handsomely apologize to the French government—you'll be in midocean, going west, and, I'm afraid, seasick. Hey, there!"—turning to a court attendant—"Bannerjee!"

"Yes, saheb?"

"Off to jail with them! Next case!"

And in jail they were now, in a steel barred cell, watching the hours pass by in a maddening, monotonous procession, speculating in a whisper if Carmyon was still at liberty, if he was going to help them, and how. They were not very optimistic; indeed, grew despondent when, a few hours later, a Babu jailer came in with their mid-day meal or curry and rice and told them that arrangements for their deportation had been made.

"When?" asked Tamerlanoff.

"The boat sails Wednesday, saheb."

And this was Monday.

Tamerlanoff sighed with Slav resignation. L'Hommedieu swore wickedly.

Then they were silent.

For there was nothing to be said; nothing to be done; so little to be hoped.

So little to be hoped! The same thought in Carmyon's mind as he, too, watched the hours pass by in a maddening, monotonous procession, as he asked himself over and over again:

"What shall I do? What can I do?"

And he remembered how he had boasted to the little sultana about the days of chivalry and the many grand, glittering, storied deeds he would do for her sake—and here he was now, a fugitive from the police, in this stinky, dirty room, and his freedom more or less at the mercy of a half-caste's greed.

"What shall I do? the maddening refrain in his brain. "Dear Lord, what can I do?"

Perhaps she had already arrived at that little Persian port beyond the border. Perhaps she was thinking of him, waiting for him. O, damn the damned luck. He squashed a large bloodthirsty mosquito, then wiped his perspiring forehead.

Wouldn't she laugh if she could see him now! He remembered her laugh—such a jolly attractive laugh—so low and soft, and so brave.

Yes, how brave she was and yet how needful of protection—his protection.

His protection—because he loved her.

Love! what an unsatisfactory word for a great, haunting penetrating mystery—and so Lord Carmyon stared into the void and—it was so futile so useless—tried to analyze love's ineffable secret.

Finally he gave up. He just accepted the fact with a plunge of complete self-abandonment.

He had been a fool not to tell her. Because she was a sultana, a queen?

No, no—that wasn't it.

Because he was—well silly, but true—because he was shy. Never had been shy with women before—women with whom he flirted in passing.

Why with Evelyn?

"Because you love her, old chap!" he said to himself.

He would tell her all about it the next time he saw her. O, the strange blessedness of telling her.

And she—what would she reply?

He remembered every last word she had said to him at parting—every last word. This she had said and that, and—

"By Jove!" he exclaimed suddenly, excitedly. "That chap she told about—her father's best friend."

Marriage and Sex Secrets

Find Out the Mysteries of Life!

Read the Most Sensational Book in Years, "The Eternal Question" —and Know Why Marriage is So Often a Failure.

JUDGES granted over 2,000,000 misadvised divorces last year. Why? What's wrong with marriage? Is it spiritual? Is it physical? Is it the man's fault? Or does the woman fail? Will trial marriages solve sex mistakes? Is your love-life and sex-life complete? Are you unhappy because of ignorance of the fundamental facts of life? Are you committing errors which may ruin your future happiness? Do you know your desires, impulses, energies? Can you fascinate the other sex? These are but few of the subjects discussed in the amazing BRAND NEW BOOK "The Eternal Question."

Sex Secrets!
This sensational book, now published for the first time, reveals sex secrets never before seen in print—true stories of grief caused by ignorance. Clears the way to successful marriages, happy matings, contentment and fulfillment of sexual desires. Discusses every side of sex relationship, mental, spiritual, moral, physical. Talks plainly, unafraid but decently. Analyzes moments of exultation, petting, adolescence, disease, vicious sex practices, anatomy, marital bliss, measles of marriage, "the dangerous age" and similar topics. A book you will read from cover to cover and then keep for future reference as you face the problems dealt with in everyday life. And everyone must face these problems at some time.

This book is not a novel—it is a penetrating searchlight fearlessly turned on the most intimate relations of men and women. It tells all you must and should know about Limitation of Offspring and why a wife should be permitted to decide when she shall become a mother, smashing indisputably every argument against Voluntary Parenthood. Its astounding facts, upon which the very laws of life are based, convey a vital message to brides, grooms, husbands, wives.

Life's Tragedies!

A beautiful and happy bride today. Too soon a mother, then more children. The result—overwork, strained constitution, broken health, unhappiness and too often a divorce. Why is this so often the case? Why should marriage convert a healthy, normal girl into a tired old woman? Why not a continuous, happy married life, with children in proportion to the mother's strength and the means of the family? Why such sex tragedies? Authoritative answers to these questions and priceless other revelations are contained in the 406 pages of the latest and greatest sex book ever published. This startling book—privately illustrated—gives "human interest" stories, proving "TRUTH" stranger and more fascinating than fiction—"NEVER TOLD TALES"—that seldom reach the public. It frankly answers questions everyone wants to know, but hesitates even to ask a physician.

Learn the Truth!

Learn the truth about your Love-Life and Sex-Life, portrayed in this great work on "LIFE'S GREATEST SECRETS." Take no foolish chances. Don't pay the dreadful price of ignorance and suffer possible untold, agonizing grief later.

"The Eternal Question" is different from any other book you ever read, although many sad faced men and women could tell similar tales if they only had the moral courage to bare their hearts.

Letters from doctors, mothers, fathers, young husbands and happy brides testify to the importance and value of the information crowded into this book. "Its frankness is refreshing" says one reader. "Worth $10 of anyone's money" writes another.

This amazing 406-page book contains numerous full-page illustrations, beautifully cloth-bound. Its regular price is $3.50, but to introduce this vital knowledge into a million homes, for a limited time only we will send "The Eternal Question" to those who write for it, for the astonishingly low price of $1.50, which barely covers cost of handling. We predict a rush on this fascinating and entrancing volume at this ridiculously low price, so order early—today if possible as we must charge its regular price of $3.50 immediately after this edition is exhausted.

Send No Money!

Just your name and address and this sensational, BRAND NEW book will be mailed at once in plain wrapper. Simply pay postman Special Introductory Price of $1.50 and postage on arrival. If not satisfied, return the book within five days and your money will be refunded. Don't Wait—Order Now!

was working downtown for $15 a week, and he was paying $40 a month for her apartment. I didn't mean to kill him, but I found them together and—we struggled."

But what, in the meanwhile, had his wife to say about it all? And Mrs. Bogdon, the victim's wife?

Questioned after the tragedy, the fair Helena said that it had all been a horrible mistake, that Bogdon had merely come to confer with her and advise her about a divorce.

"He tried to help me and that's why he is dead," she sobbed. "My husband is a man of violent temper who shouldn't be permitted to run around loose. I tried to have him put away but officials refused to do that. First they wait for a man to commit murder, then they lock him up."

And she and the senator had not been on intimate terms?

"O, no, no, no," she replied.

A Real Partner.

Mrs. Bogdon was positive there had been nothing wrong between her husband and Mrs. Minter. She had been his partner, always—his confidante. She would have known if there were another woman in his life.

All this was before Minter gave himself up.

Senator Bogdon had been with his wife until an hour before the shooting. He had parted from her and his 6-year-old daughter Violet at the entrance to police headquarters, where he had an appointment with Chief Reed. When he left the chief he said he was going home.

Calm and dignified, with only an occasional burst of tears Mrs. Bogdon told of the ten years of happy life she and her husband had spent together. They had been pals; they had met during the war when he was a soldier and she a nurse, and they had married in the haste of a furlough and come west to conquer life together. And together they had conquered.

"I kept all the books in our office, wrote all the checks," she said. "I would have known if there were any funds lavished on other women. As for his time, I knew where he was almost every minute. I made his appointments, drove him where he wanted to go, and called for him again when he was finished with his work."

"Albert insisted that I come down to the office when I didn't want to. Is that the attitude a man would take if he were trying to keep his wife out of the way so that he could have an affair with another woman? Wouldn't he have urged me to stay at home, taken executive duties out of my something he was doing?" hands, if he had wanted to cover up

He was a victim of circumstances, she insisted. It couldn't be anything but that.

"Albert was home every night with me," she said. "And he was so fond of his baby. The first thing he did every morning was to pop into her room, and the last thing at night. He wouldn't go to bed without a last peep into her little bed to tuck the covers in and see that she was comfortable."

"Does that sound like a philandering husband?"

Mrs. Minter, informed of the other woman's statements, said she wanted to see Mrs. Bogdon. "I want to tell her the truth," she cried, "that Mr. Bogdon was nothing to me but a friend and a lawyer."

Alas for Mrs. Bogdon's wonderful trust and devotion? It is an old story, and a pitiful one.

For it developed that Bogdon had not been Mrs. Minter's attorney in the divorce action.

It developed, too, that he had not merely been a friend and adviser.

The woman, questioned at length by the district attorney, admitted at last that she and Bogdon had been in a compromising situation when Minter broke into the room.

* * *

And now—what of Justice?

Granting that there had been an affair between the woman and Senator Bogdon, could this be called a justifiable offense? Helena and Joe Minter had separated, ceased to be husband and wife only in a legal sense. Could Minter therefore call upon the unwritten law to save him?

In view of the fact that she had filed suit for divorce, was her subsequent behavior any business of his, except as evidence in a divorce court?

Justice pondered these questions and wondered just what to do.

One Year.

Wisely, at the trial, Minter's lawyer did not dwell too strongly on the unwritten law. Minter hadn't intended to kill the man; he had wanted only to scare him, but the man had struggled with him and seized the gun.

And the gun had been fired.

That was his story. No witness could be summoned to deny it, not even Mrs. Minter, who had retired in haste to the bathroom when her husband broke through the door.

On October 24 Minter was found guilty of involuntary manslaughter. The following day he waived his right to petition for a new trial in the county jail. This was the maximum penalty for involuntary manslaughter.

The defendant did not go on the witness stand, nor did Mrs. Minter nor Mrs. Bogdon.

On December 10 Minter was granted a divorce on grounds of desertion. Some sensational testimony was expected at the hearing, but it failed to develop when Minter withdrew his charge of infidelity on his wife's agreement to withdraw her cross-complaint and permit him to get the divorce.

Minter is now studying law in the county jail with the idea of becoming an attorney after his release.

Stop Whiskey

By John's Wife

I'm the happiest little woman
In all this little town;
And my merry laugh and singing
Takes the place of sigh and frown.
For JOHN HAS QUIT HIS DRINKING
And is like himself once more.
And the world is just a paradise
With such happiness in store.

One day I read some verses—
"Mary's Miracle," the name,
And I said, that's John exactly,
And I'll send and get the same.
So I sent for GOLDEN TREATMENT,
(As sly as sly could be)
And I put it in John's supper
And I put it in his tea.
And it didn't taste a little bit;
Had no odor, so, you see—
It was smoothest kind of sailing
For little Doctor Me.
And I watched and prayed and waited,
(And cried some, too, I guess)
And I didn't have the greatest faith,
I'm ashamed now to confess.
And John never thought a minute
He was being cured of drink,
And soon he's as well as any one,
It makes me cry to think!
Just makes me cry for gladness,
I'm so proud to be his wife—
Since he is cured of drinking,
And leads a nice, new life.
"Since John has quit a-drinking!"
I can't say it times enough!
And hates and loathes a liquor
As he would a poison stuff.
And when I say my prayers at night
As thankful as can be—
I pray for John the most of all—
Then GOLDEN TREATMENT.

Girls Can Easily Make This Mail Box For Special Use on Valentine's Day

What could be nicer than receiving your valentines in a special mail box? This one is simply made from a shoe box, and can be used at a party, at home, or in the school room to distribute the tokens of the day.

To begin with, take a nice shoe box and paste the cover on it firmly. Cut along the dotted lines around the end of the box, and make a slot as shown in Figure I. Then cut a piece of light cardboard the size of the top opening plus an inch to be folded over and pasted to the back of the box, as shown in Figure II.

Now the box is ready to be covered. First make a couple of slots in the back to lace the ribbon through and then cover the whole thing with white crepe paper. The slots are shown in Figure II, and the box covered in Figure IV. A ruffle has been pasted around the cover, ribbon has been tied through the slots, and hearts decorate the box. Figure V shows how to cut the hearts accurately (red crepe paper is used) and also how to group them.

Clever little favors for the Valentine day party may be made in the same way from tiny boxes.

Five Short Verses Here Will Fit a Valentine

Are you making some Valentines of your own? Here are a few ideas for verses to print on them. Maybe one of these will be the very thought you're looking for.

FOR MOTHER.

Will you be my Valentine
Once again, dear mother mine?
My best girl you'll always be,
Accept this Valentine from me.

FROM A RADIO FAN.

Broadcasting by station Me!
If my Valentine you'll be
Tell you what I'm going to do—
Get a headset made for two.

A TEASING ONE.

Roses are red,
Violets are blue,

Changing a girl to a lady takes a long time, but you may be able to do it quickly in this word chain. Remember that each time you change a letter you must form a new word. Change GIRL to LADY in eight moves.

Shamrocks are green,
But so aren't you!

FOR A GIRL.

I'd like to give you candy,
But I haven't got a cent;
I'd like to send you flowers—
But my clothes I'd have to rent;
Some day when I make money
Such things I'll buy, you'll see,
So won't you be contented
With this Valentine from me?

TO MOST ANYONE.

I've thought and thought
The whole day through
Of something nice
To say to you—
Something pretty, something new.
I'd like to phrase
Some sentence fine—
Yet here I send
The same old line:
"Won't you be my Valentine?"

HIS INTENTIONS KINDLY.

Judge: "So you broke a bat over that man's head, did you? Well, what can you say for yourself?"
Prisoner: "Your Honor, it was an accident!"
Judge: "An accident? Impossible!"
Prisoner: "I didn't mean to break the bat."

A THOUGHT ABOUT LINCOLN

One hundred years ago Abraham Lincoln was celebrating his nineteenth birthday. Nobody guessed then that he would become one of the world's great men.

Suppose that Lincoln were alive today. It would be unnecessary for him to trudge miles to borrow a book, or to sit up far into the night studying by the flickering light of a pine knot. Even the poorest people in a modern community have advantages that were unknown in Lincoln's home.

Perhaps if Lincoln were living today instead of one hundred years ago, he would not be the great man that he was. Of course, the qualities of his greatness were inborn, and probably they would have taken him far in any time and place. But the obstacles that he had to overcome, and the privations he had to endure, served to develop these qualities to the fullest. He thrived on adversity.

Don't complain when things are hard for you. Perhaps these very difficulties are doing you the most good.

For the Class Cup

A Story of the Conquerors' Club and Basketball
By W. BOYCE MORGAN

SYNOPSIS.

Three members of the Conquerors' club—Bob Miller, captain; Bill Jenkins, star forward, and Red Hopkins—are playing on the sophomore team at Ferriston High school, which is tied with the juniors for first place in the class league. Frank Ripley, a dirty player on the junior team, purposely injures Bill's ankle while they are skating because Bill had worsted him in a fight. With Bill out of the lineup, the sophomores lose their first game with the juniors, but Bill recovers in time to play the second game, which the sophomores win. A third game is thus necessary to determine the winner of the cup. On the night preceding the final game, Porky Jones, fourth member of the Conquerors' club, calls Bob on the phone and informs him that Ripley and his gang are planning to waylay Bill on his way from Ruth Sauer's home. Bob gathers Porky, Red and Ted Weeks, junior class president, together and in Ted's car they start out to protect Bill.

NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY.

INSTALLMENT V.

At Bob's direction Ted drove the car at once to Ruth's house, but the darkness there told them that Bill had started for home.

"I hope we aren't too late," said others right behind him, Bob leaped to the ground, and with a cry dashed forward.

But one of Bill's assailants saw them coming, and uttered a cry of warning. At once the ruffians took to their heels. Bill, however, seeing his fellow Conquerors coming to the rescue, immediately forsook his defensive attitude and took the offensive. He lunged forward and grappled with Ripley just as Bob arrived, and while they brought the treacherous junior to earth Porky and Red caught one of the others.

"We've got you this time, Ripley!" announced Bob triumphantly, as he pulled the boy to his feet. "You can't get away with your dirty work forever."

It might have gone hard with Ripley just then, but at that moment a car pulled to the curb behind Ted's, and a tall, slender man got hastily out. The boys uttered murmurs of surprise as they saw it was Professor Kane, principal of the high school.

"Good evening, boys," he said calmly. "I know you'd like to teach them a lesson here, but I'd rather you wouldn't."

With just the least bit of reluctance the Conquerors released their two prisoners.

"I guess that ends this affair for the time being," continued the professor. "I'll expect you boys to appear before the faculty board at their meeting and tell your stories. I'm sorry, Ted, that the junior team is weakened this way on the eve of an important game, but I commend you for your action in the affair. And I also congratulate Bill on having such loyal friends."

With a cordial goodnight he then climbed into his car and drove away.

"Well, I'll be jiggered!" muttered Red. "Who'd have expected him to come along at a time like this?"

"He certainly saved those boys a bad evening!" grunted Porky.

"And you fellows saved me one," said Bill gratefully. "I think they were going to give me plenty."

"Thank Old Sleuth Porky for that," grinned Bob. "He's the one that discovered the plot and gave the alarm."

The boys climbed into Ted's car on his offer to take them all home.

"Well this is tough on the junior team, Ted, as the professor said," commented Bob.

"They should have been kicked off it long ago," answered the junior president shortly. "I'm ashamed that they ever played for us, and the rest of the class will feel the same way when they hear the truth. We'll give you a battle tomorrow night anyway, but if you win you certainly deserve the cup."

"And I want to tell you," he continued, "that I am responsible for Professor Kane's timely arrival. After you called me, Bob, I called him, and he followed us. I thought he might as well see how things were. I hope you don't mind."

"Not at all," said Bob heartily. "I guess it's a lot better this way. But—he grinned—"I wish he'd stayed away about one minute more, so I could have taken a poke at Ripley."

The deciding game between the sophomores and juniors on the following night was a good one, in spite of the loss of two players to the junior team. But the sophomores, who had beaten them with Ripley in, did it again with Ripley out, and when the game was finished they were leading 37-26.

The juniors cheered the winners heartily as the victorious team trotted from the floor.

"I hate to lose to them," was the way Ted put it, "but I guess if it hadn't been for Ripley's dirty work we'd never have beaten them even one game."

Something to Do

DALE R. VAN HORN

When the ground is covered with snow you can still use your scooter by putting wooden runners on in place of the wheels. They must be cut so that they will fit into the frame easily and bolts thus hold them pivoted. On well packed hills and on any snow or ice-covered street or road, you can speed along faster than you ever thought possible.

Cut the runners from boards 1 inch thick and about 6 inches wide. They can be from 10 to 16 inches long, depending upon the amount of room there is in each end of your scooter frame.

To insure easy coasting you can face the runners with strips of tin or thin iron, reaming out the holes for the screws so the heads will lie flush with the metal and not stick out.

You will need a special toe grip for the foot which does the propelling, too. This can be made from a short skate strap to which have been attached about three pop bottle caps, the ragged edges on the lower side.

Cut this out and save it. With other lessons, appearing each week in this page, you will soon have the complete Chinook vocabulary.

CHICKAMUN — Pronounce as spelled, with the A as in Hay, the MUN as in Muncie, with the accent on the first syllable. This word means any kind of metal, including money. CHICKAMUN LOPE means metal, or wire, rope. KONCE CHICKAMUN is "How much money?" TKOPE CHICKAMUN is white metal, or silver, just as PHIL CHICKAMUN, red metal, is gold and KLALE CHICKAMUN, black metal, is iron.

CHICK-CHICK — Pronounce as spelled, accenting the first CHICK. This word means a wheel. CHICK-CHICK KLATAWA means "Go on wheels," as in a wagon, automobile, etc. Railroad is formed by saying, literally, "a wheeled vehicle metal road," or CHICKAMUN CHICK-CHICK OIAHUT. In the same way CHICK-CHICK WAWA - COPO-SUN ICTA is a clock, or literally, "a thing of wheels that talks time the same as the sun."

CHUCK—This is pronounced as in English, and means any liquid, but water more often than any other. OKE-OKE CHUCK means "That water" if a gesture points to a pool or other body. CHUCK COPO LE DOCTIN is medicine, or "water-from-the-doctor." CULTAS CHUCK is bad water, SALT CHUCK is salt water or the ocean, and CULTAS TKOPE CHUCK is Bad White Water or a rapid in a river. A river or a lake is named by saying, for example MISSISSIPPI CHUCK.

(Additional words of the Chinook Language will be published next week.)

Drives 1,300 Miles Without Buying Gasoline!

A remarkable test was recently made on the Stransky Vaporizer by J. R. Wood, of St. Louis. On his Oldsmobile he had been getting only 17 miles a gallon of gas. After installing the Stransky, he drove 3,000 miles and averaged 30 miles a gallon. Thus he got in effect 1,300 miles of free gasoline.

H. H. Cummings has saved 1,905 gallons of gasoline on 50,000 miles. "I have used one on my 1922 Ford which I have driven over 50,000 miles," he says. "I am getting 30 miles a gallon where before I got only 12 to 14 miles a gallon."

Virgil Barnes

N. Y. Giant Pitcher, says: "Words cannot express my delight with the Stransky Vaporizer. I left New York City after the close of the baseball season with a vaporizer on my Chrysler 60. When I arrived in Holton, Kansas, I found I had averaged within a fraction of 47 miles per gallon of gas."

Who Else Wants to Save Gasoline?

A SOUTH DAKOTA man has discovered an amazing gas saving invention now installed on over two million cars of every make. Already over ten thousand car owners say it increases gas mileage 25% to 50% . . . cleans out carbon without touching the engine . . . adds more speed and power . . . and saves an astonishing amount of money in gasoline and repair expense. There is a model for every car, truck, tractor or gasoline engine. Anybody can install it in a few minutes.

This invention is based on newly-discovered facts about potential gasoline power . . . startling facts, that few car owners know about. For example, it is now found that the average man wastes at least 20% to 30% of his gasoline through improper combustion. And many more interesting discoveries, too detailed to mention here.

Read on the right what other car owners say about it. Then accept the inventor's special introductory offer. He will send you samples to test without obligation to buy. If you find it doesn't do for you what it has done for other car owners, he will pay a cash forfeit for the few minutes you've spent in testing it.

Don't send a penny now. Simply send your name in coupon below and get full description of this queer little device that is saving money for other car owners. No obligation, of course. But if you really want to cut down the high cost of running your car, this is your opportunity. Tear out the coupon below and mail it to J. A. Stransky Mfg. Co., B-534 Stransky Block, Pukwana, S. D.

FORD

"I have used one on my Ford for over five years and have traveled over 35,000 miles. Never had any spark plug trouble. Have averaged 23 to 30 miles on one gallon of gas. I was getting close to 20 miles on one gallon before I installed the Stransky."

J. H. Alruth, Iowa.

CHEVROLET

"You people claim a saving of 25% to 50%. I found I was obtaining 43.8 miles to a gallon on a Chevrolet, whereas formerly I had been getting only 19.5. So you see the actual test surpasses your claim."

M. E. Miller, Kansas City.

BUICK

G. M. Rathbun, Charleston, W. Va., has a Buick Six. Having an old engine it was getting only 8 or 9 miles a gallon. On a 287-mile trip he got 19 miles to the gallon. He says it has saved him $49.00 on one trip.

NASH

"I had a large Nash Six which I drove from Los Angeles to San Francisco on 20 gallons of gas, whereas I have usually taken from 50 to 55 gallons."

H. T. McCallen, California.

MARMON

Beacon Holmes, garage owner, New York City, put a Stransky Vaporizer on a Marmon and says: "I increased Marmon's speed from 72 to 84 miles per hour—and a gain of 5 miles to the gallon of gas."

Pierce-Arrow

Mr. Joseph Berger, New York City, writes: "I have one on my Pierce-Arrow and have practically doubled my mileage. I have never scraped carbon since I put on your vaporizer ten months ago."

OAKLAND

"I am getting 30 miles on my Oakland and that's pretty good. I also drove an Oldsmobile 27,000 miles and never had my carbon removed except with a Stransky Vaporizer."
